EDITOR'S NOTE

College football still making move to 21st century

Progress has always been painfully slow in coming to college football. After all, this is a sport that continues to hang on to an antiquated postseason of bowls with no clear-cut way to crown a champion.

We love it like a brother, but that brother can be maddening.

And like a brother, it does things sometimes that make you want to shake your head.

Former Indianapolis Colts coach Tony Dungy addressed the topic last year.

"To think that you would have a black president of the United States and two black men who have won Super Bowls before you would have a black coach at a top-20 school is hard to believe," Dungy said.

Perhaps Dungy's words played a role in the offseason hirings of Virginia's Mike London, Louisville's Charlie Strong, Kansas' Turner Gill, Kentucky's Joker Phillips, Memphis' Larry Porter and East Carolina's Ruffin McNeill—black coaches who had more than paid their dues and proven themselves for a shot at the big time.

Their addition brings the number of black coaches in the Football Bowl Subdivision to 13. That's still embarrassingly short of their NCAA Division I hoops brethren, who employ more than 70 black head coaches.

Forty years ago, college football had another kind of race problem, only far worse. Entering the 1970 season, top-20 powers such as Texas, Arkansas, Georgia, LSU and Ole Miss had—amazingly—yet to integrate their teams.

And even at Syracuse, a school long considered to be a pioneer in sports race relations, trouble was brewing. Orange football coach Ben Schwartzwalder—the same Ben Schwartzwalder who coached arguably the greatest black player in college football history, Jim Brown, and the first black Heisman Trophy winner, Ernie Davis—was suffering through his worst season after nine black players walked out on the team in protest of their coach's unfulfilled promise to hire a black assistant.

Black players, whose numbers had grown into the high teens at most schools outside the South, were also boycotting practices at Oregon State, Iowa and Wyoming, protesting bans on facial hair, the lack of opportunities to play certain positions (like quarterback) and the dearth of black assistant coaches.

Writer John Underwood's three-part series in Sports Illustrated entitled "The Desperate Coach" brought light to what was being called an assault on coaches' authority.

"In the privacy of their offices," Underwood wrote, "over breakfast in strange towns, wherever three coaches get together, they talk about The Problem."

Forty years later, we tell our kids about such things and they think we're joking.

But in 2010, out of 120 FBS schools, college football has only 13 black head coaches.

I wish I was kidding.

ODDS-ON FAVORITE TO REPEAT SABAN'S TIDE JUST RELOADS

By Dave Curtis and Matt Hayes
Sporting News college football writers

Alabama danced out of the Rose Bowl Stadium in January as college football's national champion. And as 2010 begins, the Crimson Tide appear in great shape to finish the season with another crown.

With Heisman Trophy winner Mark Ingram, quarterback Greg McElroy and receiver Julio Jones back, Alabama's offense should be outstanding.

On defense, a slew of talented Nick Saban recruits replace the nine departed starters, mostly to the NFL.

Here's a look at how the nation's best stack up leading into the fall:

ALABAMA

An inexperienced defense will get tested in back-to-back games at Arkansas (Sept. 25) and against Florida (Oct. 2). But the offense should make up for any wobbly steps on defense.

Julio Jones

MARVIN GENTRY / US PRESSWIRE

Cameron Heyward

OHIO STATE

Quarterback Terrelle Pryor, if healthy and an improved passer, has the supporting cast to orchestrate an undefeated season.

Austin Pettis

BOISE STATE

With 21 starters back, the Broncos will start high enough in the polls for a shot at the national title game.

4 MIAMI (FLA.)

A veteran 'Canes defense should be the program's most dangerous since the 2000-02 teams, which won 32 straight games.

5 FLORIDA

The Gators will feature new starters all over the field, highlighted by quarterback John Brantley, who replaces Tim Tebow.

TCU defense

6 TCU

Expect another ferocious defense, especially against the run, to help the Horned Frogs rule the Mountain West.

7 NEBRASKA

Defensive tackle Jared Crick, now the star with Ndamukong Suh gone, can lead the Huskers to their first Big 12 crown since 1999.

8 WISCONSIN

The Badgers need to find replacements for top pass rusher O'Brien Schofield and safety Chris Maragos if they want to challenge the Buckeyes.

9 TEXAS

The Garrett Gilbert era, which began one game too soon, continues with his first full season at quarterback.

10 OKLAHOMA

It's time for star receiver Ryan Broyles to leap from the all-conference squad to the All-America team.

11 OREGON

Quarterback Jeremiah Masoli's suspension bumped the Ducks from the preseason Top 10. But strong play from Nate Costa, his replacement, can get them back in.

Ryan Williams

#12 VIRGINIA TECH

The running back tandem of Ryan Williams and Darren Evans looks like the nation's best.

13 IOWA

Study up on defensive end Adrian Clayborn, as no defensive lineman in America will help his team more in 2010.

14 FLORIDA STATE

A team unified under coach Jimbo Fisher, and a healthy quarterback in Christian Ponder, should win its first ACC Atlantic crown since 2005.

15 OREGON STATE

Running back Jacquizz and receiver James make the Rodgers boys the best brother duo in college football this year.

16 USC

Look for Lane Kiffin to keep the Trojans among the nation's elite, and for standout linebacker Devon Kennard to shine in Monte Kiffin's scheme.

17 AUBURN

Junior college transfer quarterback Cameron Newton ranks as the SEC's biggest wild card entering 2010.

18 GEORGIA TECH

The option offense will continue to thrive. But Tech's defense will struggle with early departures by Derrick Morgan and Morgan Burnett.

19 PITTSBURGH

Running back Dion Lewis has the talent—and will get the opportunities—to follow Alabama's Ingram as a Heisman Trophy winner.

20 LSU

Here's the strength of the SEC West: The Tigers should finish third in the division, yet still rank in the top 20.

21 ARKANSAS

With quarterback Ryan Mallett in charge and Bobby Petrino calling plays, the Hogs should feature the SEC's best passing offense.

22 UTAH

Quarterback Jordan Wynn, and four returning offensive linemen, will need to carry the Utes as their defense retools.

23 NORTH CAROLINA

If senior quarterback T.J. Yates makes better decisions, the Tar Heels can win an ACC championship.

24 WEST VIRGINIA

Running back Noel Devine will continue to emerge as one of the nation's top playmakers.

25 WASHINGTON

Quarterback Jake Locker will cap his career with the Huskies' first postseason trip since 2002.

Jordan Wynn

HEISMAN CANDIDATES

OTHER HOPEFULS

JARED CRICK DT, NEBRASKA

The most disruptive defender in the college game. Think Ndamukong Suh. He's that good.

JACQUIZZ RODGERS RB, OREGON STATE

Already has buzz from the previous two seasons; he needs to stay healthy and finally lead the Beavers to the Rose Bowl.

PATRICK PETERSON CB, LSU

The dynamic shutdown corner needs a few interception returns for touchdowns to get in the race.

CASE KEENUM QB, HOUSTON

He will hold numerous NCAA records by the end of the season.

ADRIAN CLAYBORN DE, IOWA

This elite end will see more double teams than ever before in the fall.

MARK INGRAM RB, ALABAMA

The blunt truth: He's not the best tailback on his own team (Trent Richardson is), but he fits perfectly with what the Tide want to do offensively and always plays big in important games. He's the leader from Day 1, but doesn't have the caché of previous winners to stay on top without another big season.

KELLEN MOORE QB, BOISE STATE

A season of potential firsts: the first non-BCS team to play in the BCS national championship game, and the first player from a non-BCS team to win the Heisman Trophy in the BCS era (1998-present). An efficient big-game passer, Moore has lost once in 26 career starts (64 TD, 10 INTs) and could be the NCAA's all-time leader in that category by the end of his career.

TERRELLE PRYOR QB, OHIO STATE

He won't wow you with numbers, but the Buckeyes could be unbeaten in November and his dual-threat ability will be the reason. Vince Young used a monster game in the 2005 Rose Bowl as a springboard to a breakout season. Pryor could do the same thing—and get the Buckeyes back to the BCS National Championship game.

DION LEWIS RB, PITTSBURGH

The game's most complete runner, he has power and speed and shifty cutback ability. As the spread offense continues to take over, his throwback, 30-carries-a-game style is refreshing. Pitt has enough balance in the passing game that Lewis could reach 2,000 yards rushing.

RYAN MALLETT QB, ARKANSAS

Could be the first pick of the 2011 NFL draft and with improved accuracy—and an upset of Alabama in Fayetteville—could have a huge season. Bobby Petrino's quarterbacks have always had big second seasons, and Mallett is the most talented thrower Petrino has coached.

5 NON-BCS COACHES READY TO MOVE

AI Golden

Kyle Whittingham

> Utah

Much like Chris Petersen (Boise State) and Bronco Mendenhall (BYU), it won't be easy getting Whittingham to leave Utah. But you better believe it will be just as hard for Whittingham to turn down major BCS jobs that could open in December.

Kevin Sumlin

> Houston

He would've had the Florida job last December had Urban Meyer left for good; he's that well thought of in the coaching community. Sumlin won't take just any job, but there are a handful of big BCS slots that could come open this year (see: Arizona State) that he'd jump at.

June Jones

> SMU

His offense is nearly impossible to defend, and he doesn't cut corners. A few outside the program weren't happy with the way Jones weeded out malcontents prior to last season, but now everyone is on board after the Mustangs' turnaround from 1-11 to 8-5 and the first bowl appearance in 25 years.

June Jones

AI Golden

> Temple

When Golden arrived, the program was a dump (coming off a winless season) with little or no support from the administration and on the verge of dropping down to the FCS. The wins have increased in his four seasons in Philadelphia: one, four, five and finally nine last season when the Owls were MAC East co-champions.

Ken Niumatalolo

> Navy

A plea to athletic directors across the nation: Do some research on Niumatalolo. Like what you see at Georgia Tech? Niumatalolo will run the same system as Yellow Jackets coach Paul Johnson with the same no-excuses philosophy—and get the same results. His Navy teams are 5-6 against BCS schools, including wins over Notre Dame and Missouri, and a near win at Ohio State.

TOP FIVE ASSISTANT COACHES

Kirby Smart

defensive coordinator, Alabama

It's only a matter of time before another Nick Saban assistant (Jimbo Fisher, Will Muschamp, Derek Dooley) makes it big. Smart has the ability to stay and wait for the perfect job.

Bryan Harsin

offensive coordinator, Boise State

Like Chris Petersen before him, he'd get the Boise State job if Petersen did the unthinkable and left. More than likely, though, he'll get his choice of non-BCS jobs—and may just land a BCS gig in the right situation.

Tyrone Nix

defensive coordinator, Ole Miss

One of the game's best coordinators for years, he turned down other coordinator offers this offseason to stay in Oxford. It's only a matter of time before the top minority candidate available gets a big job.

Kirby Smart

Everett Withers

defensive coordinator, North Carolina

Withers has a ton of experience at both the NFL and college levels, working under some of the game's best coaches (Jeff Fisher in the NFL; Mack Brown and Butch Davis in college). North Carolina's defense could be the nation's best this fall, and that could lead to a head-coaching job.

James Cregg

offensive line coach, USC

He's not leaving USC anytime soon, but his impact will be felt immediately. His work last year with an inexperienced and marginally talented Tennessee offensive line was remarkable. Watch what happens with all those elite recruits at USC.

Get 'er done: Window to produce success is getting smaller each season for conference's coaches

By Dan Collins, Winston-Salem Journal (ACC Atlantic previews) and Ken Tysiac, Charlotte Observer (ACC Coastal previews)

Moving companies have made a killing from ACC schools in recent seasons. Nine of the 12 conference head-coaching jobs have changed hands since Wake Forest won the conference title in 2006.

Jim Grobe, who eschewed the turnover during the Deacons' improbable run, has seen a lot of it in the coaching ranks since.

When the smoke finally cleared from Bobby Bowden's retirement after 34 years as head coach at Florida State, Grobe and Ralph Friedgen were, technically speaking, co-deans of ACC coaches. Both arrived on the scene in 2001.

Frank Beamer has been the head coach at Virginia Tech since 1987, but the Hokies didn't join the league until 2004.

Maybe it's a consequence of times made ever louder and shriller by Internet and talk-radio clamor and debate. Maybe it's a notion by conference athletic directors and their fan bases that if Wake Forest can win the conference, then so can they.

But for whatever reason, a trend that began with the hiring of Butch Davis at North Carolina, Tom O'Brien at N.C. State and Randy Shannon at Miami in 2007 has continued unabated. Duke's David Cutcliffe and Georgia Tech's Paul Johnson were hired in 2008. Clemson's Dabo Swinney and Boston College's Frank Spaziani began their first full seasons in 2009.

And Florida State's Jimbo Fisher and Virginia's Mike London are the newbies for 2010.

Two of the three coaches who joined the league in 2007, Davis and O'Brien, didn't make the kind of strides in their third seasons that many thought they would. And though Shannon won nine games last year, there are many holdovers from the glory days who believe it's long past time the Hurricanes at least play for a conference title.

All will get another chance to please in 2010. Based on trends, they'd better get it done.

RECRUITING ROUNDUP By Mike Farrell, Rivals.com

1. FLORIDA STATE The Seminoles signed three top 50 defenders in LBs Christian Jones and Jeff Luc and cornerback LaMarcus Joyner.

2. MIAMI Leading the way for Miami is five-star athlete Latwan Anderson and standout RBs Eduardo Clements and Storm Johnson.

3. CLEMSON The Tigers filled a critical need in the trenches with Josh Watson and Tavaris Barnes.

4. VIRGINIA TECH Virginia Tech solidified both lines with Nick Acree, Mark Shuman, Zack McCray and the nation's No. 2 prep school prospect, offensive tackle Laurence Gibson.

5. NORTH CAROLINA The Heels succeeded defensively with Kareem Martin, Ethan Farmer, Tim Jackson and Brandon Willis.

6. N.C. STATE The Wolfpack are bringing in two key additions in five-star tackle Robert Crisp and four-star lineman Tyson Chandler.

7. MARYLAND The Terps got some of the best homegrown talent with the additions of Nathaniel Clarke and Javarie Johnson.

8. GEORGIA TECH The defensive backfield received a big boost, adding Louis Young, Ryan Ayers and Barry Bostic.

9. BOSTON COLLEGE Quarterback was a need area, and BC pulled in two good ones with Chase Rettig and Joshua Bordner.

10. VIRGINIA Virginia's class is led by offensive tackle Morgan Moses.

11. WAKE FOREST Wake found success at home with three in-state commitments.

12. DUKE Duke pulled in four of the state's top 30 prospects in the 2010 class.

FOUR FEARLESS FORECASTS

1 Ralph Friedgen will coach his last season at Maryland. After a fantastic start, the Terps have steadily declined under the Maryland alum.

2 Christian Ponder will be the ACC's MVP. The brainy Florida State QB, who's back from shoulder surgery, will torch opponents in the weak Atlantic Division.

3 Scoring will increase. With Ponder, Russell Wilson (N.C. State), Josh Nesbitt (Georgia Tech), Tyrod Taylor (Virginia Tech) and Jacory Harris (Miami) all back at QB, offenses will be ahead of defenses.

4 NFL scouts will flock to Chapel Hill. The Tar Heels have five first-round candidates in Marvin Austin, Bruce Carter, Robert Quinn, Deunta Williams and Quan Sturdivant.

ASCENDING

FLORIDA STATE Now that the soap opera surrounding Bobby Bowden's retirement is over, Jimbo Fisher can begin moving a united program in a new direction.

DESCENDING

CLEMSON With C.J. Spiller and Jacoby Ford gone, the Tigers are dangerously short on athletes who can make big plays on offense.

Back in our maiden season, '85, Jim Hurley's Network was the first sports analysis network in the world.

Today there are so many copycats I can't hear myself think. Network This. Network That. Joe's Network. Sam's Network. I have to stick my head above the crowd and yell...

THE NEXT BIG THING

GREG REID, CB/PR

A nickel back in 2009, Reid will expand his duties with the loss of three defensive backs. He was also one of the nation's most dangerous return specialists last fall, averaging 18.4 yards per punt return.

How smooth the transition goes will come down to quarterback Christian Ponder's surgically repaired right shoulder. Inconsistent play under center has been one of the biggest reasons the Seminoles haven't won an ACC title since 2005, and Ponder was showing signs of becoming a player with the stature and ability of a Chris Weinke or Thad Busby before he blew out his shoulder in the ninth game at Clemson.

Florida State was an independent school playing in a 40,500-seat stadium and coming off a 3-8 season the last time it broke in a new coach.

Seminoles first-year coach Jimbo Fisher is being asked to return the fortunes of FSU to its glory. The man he replaced, Bobby Bowden, built it in the first place.

It's hard to imagine an FSU season without Bowden roaming the sidelines as he has every year since 1976, winning two national championships, 12 ACC titles and 304 games in the process. He once had 316 victories before the NCAA removed 12 of them in punishment for a cheating scandal that involved 61 athletes in 10 sports at FSU and made Bowden's final days as coach more harried than they would have been otherwise.

But time, as well as the rest of the ACC, finally caught up to Bowden, and after the Seminoles started 2-3 last season, the chairman of the FSU Board of Trustees publicly called for Bowden to make 2009 his last campaign. Bowden lobbied for one more year, but the forces that arrayed against him became too powerful.

Fisher, a former offensive coordinator at LSU who has been the coach-in-waiting at Florida State since 2007, has big shoes to fill.

Ponder, whose passing efficiency (147.7) would have ranked fourth in the ACC if he had played in the required number of games, was back at quarterback on the first day of spring practice and is expected to be full speed by the Sept. 4 opener.

He'll direct an offense loaded with talent and experience. It includes 10 starters from a unit that scored 30.1 points a game last season, sixth best in the ACC.

The offensive line remains intact with the return of tackles Andrew Datko and Zebrie Sanders, guards Rodney Hudson and David Spurlock and center Ryan McMahon. Hudson won the Jacobs Blocking Trophy last season as the best offensive lineman in the conference, while Datko received honorable mention All-ACC honors.

Jermaine Thomas was good as a freshman, when he ranked seventh in the ACC with 64 yards rushing per game and scored nine touchdowns.

Rod Owens, the only offensive starter not coming back, led FSU last season with 61 catches, but Bert Reed hauled in 60, Jarmon Fortson snagged 45 and Taiwan Easterling caught 35.

There's more work to be done on defense, and for the first time in 26 seasons it won't be Mickey Andrews doing the brunt of it. Andrews, who coached 18 first-round NFL draft picks, retired as defensive coordinator after the season, choosing to go out with Bowden.

Among the five new assistants on Fisher's staff are defensive coordinator Mark Stoops, linebackers coach Greg Hudson and defensive ends coach D.J. Eliot. They'll have six starters returning in tackles Moses McCray and Everett Dawkins, end Markus White, linebackers Kendall Smith and Nigel Bradham and cornerback Ochuko Jenije.

Bradham led the Seminoles last year with 93 tackles, and Smith ranked second with 85. White had 10.5 tackles for loss and two sacks, while Jenije tied the team high with four interceptions.

The toughest task might be rebuilding the secondary around Jenije. Greg Reid, who was impressive last season at cornerback and as punt return man, started in the Seminoles' nickel defense last fall and will likely line up at corner opposite Jenije.

The safety positions are wide open, with Terrance Parks, Nick Moody, Justin Bright, Gerald Demps and Jajuan Harley all challenging for the roles.

RECRUITING REPORT

The shift from coach Bobby Bowden to Jimbo Fisher was a smooth one leading up to national signing day, as the Seminoles once again put together the top recruiting class in the ACC.

The 'Noles made a concerted effort in the Sunshine State, landing half of their recruits from Florida. They also went to Connecticut, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas and New Jersey to put this class together.

Five-star prospect Lamarcus Joyner leads the way. Joyner is an undersized cornerback who plays bigger than his size, has long arms and is incredibly explosive. He will move from safety to cornerback at FSU, but there's little doubt he'll make a big impact over time.

Another five-star prospect, linebacker Christian Jones, is massive (6-4, 220 pounds) and could end up playing with his hand down. He'll be joined at linebacker by Jeff Luc, who enrolled in time for spring practice.

It wasn't just the defense that received a boost in Tallahassee. The Seminoles landed two top wideouts in De'Joshua Johnson and Kenny Shaw, as well as versatile athletes Christian Green and Greg Dent. All four will provide plenty of speed.

2 BOSTON COLLEGE

EAGLES

MONTEL
HARRIS, RB

It was a great story when Boston College rewarded Frank Spaziani for his loyalty—12 years as an Eagles assistant—by naming him head football coach.

And Spaziani spent his first season making the story even better.

Picked by many to finish last in the division, the Eagles placed second to Clemson in the Atlantic Division at 5-3, and finished 8-5 overall after losing to USC in the Emerald Bowl.

Considering the adversity the Eagles had to overcome, it was the stuff of which Hollywood movies are made.

One star linebacker, Mark Herzlich, the ACC's Defensive Player of the Year in 2008, was diagnosed with bone cancer before the season and didn't play a down. Another standout 'backer, Mike McLaughlin, tore his Achilles tendon in the spring and didn't make it back until the fourth game against Wake Forest.

The only quarterback with any experience, Dominique Davis, transferred before the season began, leaving offensive coordinator Gary Tranquill with Dave Shinskie, a 25-year-old freshman who spent the previous seven years playing minor league baseball. Shinskie started the final 10 games but struggled to get the Eagles into the end zone.

Consequently, even with sophomore Montel Harris rushing for 1,457

BULLET POINTS

- ➔ The Eagles' most pressing need is better play at the most important position, quarterback.
- ➔ The return of Mark Herzlich from cancer to team with Luke Kuechly gives BC two of the best 'backers in the ACC.
- ➔ Colin Larmond Jr. should emerge as the Eagles' go-to receiver.

BOWL PROJECTION

MUSIC CITY BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING CHRIS PANTALE, TE

The Eagles have a rising star in Pantale, and offensive coordinator Gary Tranquill proved last season that he knows how to use him. Pantale caught 25 passes in 2009 and was named a second-team Freshman All-American.

yards—second in the ACC to Virginia Tech's Ryan Williams—the Eagles still ranked ninth in the league with 24.8 points a game.

The backbone of the team was again Spaziani's defense, which overcame the loss of Herzlich to rank third in the ACC in scoring defense (19.8 points a game). Along the way, a new star emerged when freshman linebacker Luke Kuechly led the ACC (and was second nationally) with 12.15 tackles a game on the way to being named ACC Defensive Rookie of the Year.

As he looks for an encore, Spaziani still has the quarterback problem to contend with. Shinskie has new competition with the arrival of freshman QBs Joshua Bordner and Chase Rettig in time for spring practices. And sophomore Mike Marscovetra, who did little to distinguish himself last year, is in the mix as well.

Harris is back to run behind an offensive line that returns everybody except for center Matt Tennant. Anthony Castonzo, a 6-7, 295-pound left tackle who made first-team All-ACC last season, leads the line.

The biggest holes to fill on offense are at wide receiver, where Rich Gunnell and Justin Jarvis were lost to spent eligibility. The leading targets returning are Colin Larmond, Jr., who caught 29 passes for 596 yards and five touchdowns last season, and tight end Chris Pantale (25 receptions, 223 yards).

The defense lost five good players in tackle Austin Giles, end Jim Ramella, McLaughlin, cornerback Roderick Rollins and safety Marcellus Bowman. But the Eagles could get a huge morale boost if Herzlich is able to make it back to the field, as he spent the offseason planning to do.

A linebacker trio of Herzlich, Kuechly and Mike Morrissey, who had 37 tackles last season, could be one of the strongest in the conference, if not the country.

End Alex Albright, who made 32 tackles (including eight for loss) last season, will join tackle Damik Scafe (35 tackles) in anchoring the defensive line. Brad Newman, a 6-2, 256-pound senior, is expected to play both end and tackle after splitting time with Albright last season at end, and Spaziani is hoping to get a full season out of Kaleb Ramsey, who has been saddled by injuries.

Wes Davis emerged in 2009 as one of the best safeties in the conference when he started 12 games, made 46 tackles and picked off three passes.

A stingy defense and a big-footed punter make up a time-tested game plan, and in junior Ryan Quigley, the Eagles have one of the best punters in the ACC. Quigley ranked fifth in the conference last season with an average of 40.8 yards per punt and tied Matt Boshier of Miami for the league lead with 23 boots downed inside the 20.

RECRUITING REPORT

As usual, Boston College's results on the field were better than its efforts in recruiting—at least on paper. While the Eagles finished near the bottom of the ACC in recruiting, this is a team that relies on overachievers who come in with chips on their shoulders and compete.

The Eagles did very well offensively, landing coveted quarterback Chase Rettig from California as well as big-time wide receiver Shakim Phillips from New Jersey. They also landed another top class of offensive linemen, led by Pennsylvania tackle Seth Betancourt, Illinois guard Andy Galik and Massachusetts sleeper Robert Vardaro. Running back Andre Williams could also be a sleeper in the ACC.

On defense, linebacker Kevin Pierre-Louis will likely continue BC's tradition of excellence at the position. Defensive end Dominic Appiah and cornerback C.J. Jones have tremendous potential. Athlete James McCaffrey could play slot receiver, cornerback or safety for the Eagles. Late addition Dominique Williams will be a big hitter in the secondary.

The program met its needs at nearly every position except for depth along the defensive line, which will be an area of focus for 2011.

3 N.C. STATE WOLFPACK

WOLFPACK • WOLFPACK • WOLFPACK • WOLFPACK

Just when Tom O'Brien appeared to have the N.C. State program up to speed, his star linebacker ran off the road last June.

The Wolfpack never recovered.

With Nate Irving sidelined all season with injuries suffered when he fell asleep at the wheel on Interstate 40, the Wolfpack defense was enough of a pushover to tie for last in the ACC in scoring defense (31.2 points per game). And with quarterback Russell Wilson proving his mortality after a remarkable freshman season in 2008, N.C. State couldn't score enough points to avoid a disappointing 5-7 overall record and 2-6 finish in conference play.

Irving, who had 84 tackles in 2008 despite missing two games with an injury, is expected to be healthy in time for the season opener. He'll be playing a new position under a new linebackers coach. Jon Tenuta, a former defensive coordinator at North Carolina, Georgia Tech and Notre Dame, has moved Irving from boundary linebacker to middle.

Defensive coordinator Mike Archer will need an influx of new talent and further development of veterans after losing Willie Young, a second-team All-ACC defensive end, and six other starters. There are four players returning who started at least six games last season: linebackers Audie Cole and Dwayne Maddox, cornerback C.J. Wilson and safety Brandon Bishop.

Archer's most pressing task is to rebuild a defensive line that lost all four starters in Young, Shea McKeen, Alan-Michael Cash and Leroy Burgess. At least help has arrived in defensive end Jeff Rieskamp, who was sidelined all of last season with an injury. End Michael Lemon and tackle Natanu Mageo, who played all 12 games, should see time. And tackle Markus Kuhn (6-4, 303 pounds), who gained 20 pounds while redshirting last season, is an unproven commodity.

Wilson, who tied Riley Skinner for second in the ACC in passing efficiency (147.8) in '09, missed spring practices to concentrate on baseball. Speculation suggests that he might declare for the MLB draft. So backup Mike Glennon, who completed 61.5 percent of his passes for 248 yards last year, is preparing for a possible promotion.

Seven starters return from an offense that ranked fourth in the ACC with 30.3 points a game last year. Wide receiver Owen Spencer led the nation and set a conference record with 25.5 yards per catch a year ago, while Jarvis Williams caught 11 touchdown passes, third most in school history.

The two leading running backs, Toney Baker and Jamelle Eugene, both were lost to spent eligibility. But Curtis Underwood returns after redshirting his junior season. Sophomores James Washington and Brandon Barnes will also challenge for playing time.

XAVIER DYE, WR

In his second full season, Dabo Swinney will take another stab at accomplishing what the two previous Clemson football coaches, Tommy West and Tommy Bowden, could not.

His sights are set on the school's first ACC title since Ken Hatfield's team won it in 1991. It's a conspicuous streak for a program that has sent so many notable players to the NFL, and it began the season Florida State joined the conference.

Swinney, who replaced Bowden in the seventh game of the 2008 season, came close last year, when the Tigers won the Atlantic Division (6-2) before losing to Georgia Tech 39-34 in the ACC championship. Clemson rallied in the fourth quarter, only to lose when Jonathan Dwyer scored the winning touchdown for the Yellow Jackets with 1:20 remaining.

The Tigers lost nine starters from last year's 9-5 squad, including C.J. Spiller, an All-America running back who set 31 school records and finished second on the NCAA's all-time list with 7,588 all-purpose yards. He and wide receiver Jacoby Ford (56 catches, 779 yards, 6 TDs) will be hard to replace.

The offensive line remains intact, with one notable exception in Thomas Austin, a second-team All-ACC guard. With Austin gone, look for All-ACC second-teamer Chris Hairston and Landon Walker at tackle, along with guard Antoine McClain and center Dalton Freeman protecting quarterback Kyle Parker.

The line will also look after Spiller's successor, which could be either Andre Ellington (491 yards) or Jamie Harper (418).

Parker, who doubles as a starting outfielder for the Clemson baseball team and has flirted with declaring for the MLB draft, showed promise last year when he passed for 2,526 yards, the fifth-highest total for a freshman in ACC history.

Clemson's defense finished third in the ACC in total defense (314.3 yards per game) and fourth in scoring defense (20.4 points per game) last fall. With six starters returning on that side of the ball, the Tigers have a chance to ignite.

Even after the loss of defensive end Ricky Sapp, who made second-team All-ACC, the Tigers should again be stout up front with the return of end Da'Quan Bowers and tackles Jarvis Jenkins and Brandon Thompson. Bowers, a force off the edge, had 11 tackles for loss, three sacks and 12 QB pressures last year.

Middle linebacker Brandon Maye (103 tackles) could be one of the ACC's most intimidating players this season.

The secondary boasts safety DeAndre McDaniel, a first-team All-ACC choice last year who led the conference with eight interceptions, and cornerback Marcus Gilchrist, who started all 14 games a year ago.

THE NEXT BIG THING BRANDON MAYE, LB

After deferring to seniors Kavell Conner and Kevin Alexander last year, Maye is ready to assume center-stage in the Clemson defense. He was good in 2009 with 103 tackles. Barring injury, he'll be better in 2010.

BULLET POINTS

- Chris Hairston anchors one of the most experienced and talented O-lines in ACC.

BRANDON
PENDERGRASS, QB

Three seasons have come and gone since Wake Forest turned the ACC upside down.

Riley Skinner, the freshman quarterback who came out of nowhere to lead the Deacons to the 2006 ACC title, never made it back to the championship game. His final season ended one victory short of a fourth straight bowl, when the Deacons lost five in a row to finish 5-7 overall and 3-5 in conference play.

To make it back to the Orange Bowl, the Deacons will have to do it without linebacker Aaron Curry, cornerbacks Alphonso Smith and Brandon Ghee, defensive tackles John Russell and Boo Robinson ... and, of course, Skinner.

Coach Jim Grobe says his recruiting classes have improved each year since he took over one of college football's most historically downtrodden teams in 2001. Some of that young talent will have to emerge quickly if the Deacons are going to remain competitive in the Atlantic Division.

The most gaping hole is quarterback. Skinner, in 49 starts, completed 903 passes for 9,762 yards and just missed setting the ACC record for career completion percentage. He holds most of the career records at Wake and ranks second all-time in the ACC in completions, fourth in passing yards and seventh with 60 touchdown passes.

Junior Skylar Jones emerged as the favorite after an impressive spring. He'll receive competition from injury-riddled sophomore Ted Stachitas, a highly regarded recruit in 2008, and Brendan Cross, who ran the scout team last season.

Whoever wins the QB job will need consistent effort from the offensive line. The Deacons, one of the NCAA's most formidable running teams early in Grobe's tenure, ranked eighth in the ACC last season with 131.8 rushing yards per game, and Wake Forest quarterbacks were sacked 28 times—sixth most in the conference.

Senior running back Josh Adams has yet to regain his form from 2007, when he was named ACC Offensive Rookie of the Year after gaining 953 yards and scoring 12 touchdowns. Last season he gained 541 yards and scored four TDs while splitting the position with Brandon Pendergrass (399 yards).

The defensive line will have to rebuild after the loss of Russell and Robinson, though the return of defensive end Kyle Wilber from a broken leg should help.

Seniors Matt Woodlief and Hunter Haynes provide experience at linebacker, but the success of the Deacons' defense will depend on the continued development of ends Tristan Dorthy and Wilber, safety Cyhl Quarles and cornerbacks Josh Bush and Kenny Okoro.

THE NEXT BIG THING KENNY OKORO, CB

With the loss of Brandon Ghee, Okoro will get the toughest assignments. His performance as a redshirt freshman—when he had three interceptions and 11 breakups—suggests he's ready for the challenge.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

For the longest time, it appeared that 2009 would be the year Ralph Friedgen lost more than a bunch of weight.

Before Maryland closed its 2-10 season with seven straight losses, the clamor for Friedgen to be relieved as coach had reached a fever pitch. Ultimately, Debbie Yow, the Terps' director of athletics, resisted the calls for dismissal and announced that Friedgen would be back in 2010.

But in doing so, she made it clear the patience for another 10-loss season—the first in school history—had run out.

"Coach Friedgen and I are in complete agreement on the expectation to return the football program to its competitive stature," Yow says. "He has assured the university and fans of his intentions to do whatever is necessary to become a Top 25 program again.

"He continues to have my full support."

Friedgen, 66-46 in nine seasons at Maryland, has coached the Terps to six bowl games but produced only two winning seasons in the past six years. He has two years remaining on a contract that pays him $2 million a year.

Knowing his record, he's grateful for the second chance.

"I'm very thankful for the opportunity," Friedgen says. "I hope I wasn't judged on just this year. But this shows the confidence the administration has in me and our program.

"I'm willing to repay that with everything I have to make this the team we expect it to be."

Young and injury-riddled, the Terps never got on track offensively in 2009 and finished 11th in ACC scoring with 21.3 points a game. Quarterback Chris Turner ranked seventh in the conference in passing efficiency, and Da'Rel Scott, a first-team All-ACC running back in 2008 when he gained 1,133 yards, was limited to seven starts and 425 yards due to a broken wrist.

But Friedgen is predicting an upswing with the return of seven starters on offense, including Scott, wide receiver Torrey Smith (61 catches, 824 yards) and linemen Paul Pinegar, Andrew Gonnella and R.J. Dill.

Jamarr Robinson got a leg up on the quarterback competition when he replaced an injured Turner late in the year and piled up 328 yards passing and 56 yards rushing combined against Florida State and Boston College. His 129 yards rushing against Virginia Tech were the third most last season against the Hokies (after Nebraska's Roy Helu recorded 169 yards and Heisman winner Mark Ingram had 150 for Alabama).

The defense should be more experienced, too, with four of its top five tacklers returning from a unit that tied N.C. State for the most generous in the ACC with 31.2 points allowed per game. Alex Wujciak, a first-team All-ACC linebacker last season, has 264 career tackles, the most of any returning player in the conference.

THE NEXT BIG THING DEMETRIUS HARTSFIELD, LB

Hartsfield didn't get to shine much in 2009 because of a broken wrist that limited him to 10 games and seven starts. He still finished fifth on the team with 64 tackles.

1 MIAMI HURRICANES

JACORY HARRIS, QB

By many measures, it appears "The U," as they're fond of calling themselves at the University of Miami, has regained prominence.

With a 9-4 effort last season, Miami recorded its largest win total since 2005. The Hurricanes' No. 19 position in the final Associated Press poll was their first season-ending Top 25 ranking in four years.

But it wasn't enough for some of the Miami players, who are proud they took steps toward reestablishing the Hurricanes as an elite program but believe more work needs to be done.

"We felt like last year we let a couple of those games get away from us that we should have won," recalls senior linebacker Colin McCarthy, a second-team All-ACC selection last season. "I mean, 9-4 is good for other teams, but for the University of Miami we want to win all of them. Our plan doesn't change. We want to compete for an ACC and a national championship, and that's what we're going to do."

Although a schedule that includes eight teams that played in bowls last season is difficult, the Hurricanes should be better this season. Quarterback Jacory Harris, who briefly generated some Heisman buzz last season when Miami won five of its first six games, is back as a junior.

BULLET POINTS

- Jacory Harris is emerging as a leader and big playmaker but needs to cut down on his interceptions (17 in 2009).
- Continuity on the staff, with Mark Whipple and John Lovett returning, should pay dividends.
- Punter/placekicker Boshier is a special talent who will be a difference-maker.

BOWL PROJECTION

ORANGE BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING JAMAL REID, S

In the spring, the redshirt freshman lived up to his billing as one of the top defensive backs in his class. He's on target to make a serious push for a starting job at safety.

He missed spring practice after having surgery on his right thumb. But he threw 24 touchdown passes last year and has the ability to hurt opponents as a runner as well. He is expected to return at full strength in the fall and will have a goal of cutting down on the 17 interceptions he threw in 2009.

The Hurricanes should be strong at running back even if Graig Cooper, who's recovering from a knee injury, is unable to play. Damien Berry, who ran for 616 yards and averaged 6.6 yards per carry (even though he didn't play in the first four games of last season), is back. And there's a chance that Cooper, who rushed for 695 yards last season and averaged 5.2 yards per carry, could also be back.

Miami's eight returning starters on defense include senior Allen Bailey, a first-team All-ACC defensive end who recorded seven sacks last season. And on special teams, the tireless Matt Boshier was named first-team All-ACC as a placekicker and second-team all-conference as a punter in 2009.

In addition to talent, the Hurricanes finally have continuity in Randy Shannon's fourth season as head coach. For the first time in five years, Miami has its coordinators returning on both offense (Mark Whipple) and defense (John Lovett).

Shannon has consistently brought some of the nation's top talent to Miami. He has signed top-25 classes in each of the last four years, including a No. 3-ranked haul in 2008, according to Scout.com.

But turnover on his staff (and perhaps hiring the wrong assistants in the first place) prevented the Hurricanes from extending their improvement over multiple seasons. Last year, Miami improved its scoring (up 3.2 ppg) and scoring defense (down 2.0) under Whipple and Lovett and have a chance to continue getting better this season.

Whipple has plenty of talent to work with at the skill positions. In addition to Harris and the running backs, Miami has a lot of capable wide receivers, including returning starters Leonard Hankerson and LaRon Byrd. The offensive line could be a bit of a problem, though, as just two starters—tackle Orlando Franklin and guard Joel Figueroa—are back.

There are no such problems on the defensive line, where Bailey and fellow starters Josh Holmes and Andrew Smith also return. End Adewale Ojomo, a superb pass rusher, is back after missing all of last season with a broken jaw. The Hurricanes will have plenty of depth up front with experienced returnees in Marcus Robinson, Steven Wesley, Marcus Forston and Olivier Vernon.

McCarthy, the team's leading returning tackler (he had 95 last season), leads the linebackers. He is joined by Sean Spence, the 2008 ACC Defensive Rookie of the Year who missed three games last season because of injuries.

The secondary, which has three starters back, will be led by junior Brandon Harris.

RECRUITING REPORT

Miami produced one of the top recruiting classes in the ACC. The Hurricanes hauled in 29 prospects with plenty of speed and size.

As usual, Miami pulled the majority of its talented class from Florida (16 commitments), but the Hurricanes signed prospects from as far north as Massachusetts and New York. Miami also landed prospects from California, Texas, Ohio, Illinois and Virginia.

Leading the way is five-star athlete Latwan Anderson, the No. 15 prospect in the nation. He'll likely be a cornerback for the Hurricanes because of his size and closing speed, but he can also play safety. His speed could be put to use early as a return man.

Miami solidified its offensive line with five commitments, including four-star prospects Malcolm Bunche and Brandon Linder. Both provide excellent size and can play inside or outside. The offense also added three tailbacks, including bruiser Storm Johnson, who was rated the No. 7 back in the nation.

The Hurricanes also added a good bit of talent on defense, led by tackle Tavadis Glenn. Versatile linebacker Travis Williams has the speed to play safety.

2 VIRGINIA TECH HOKIES

TYROD
TAYLOR, QB

Frank Beamer isn't installing the wishbone at Virginia Tech, but perhaps he should consider it.

The Hokies might have the best stable of running backs in the nation. Darren Evans, who set an ACC freshman rushing record with 1,265 yards in 2008, is back after missing 2009 with a torn knee ligament.

Ryan Williams, who took over for Evans, rushed for 1,655 yards as a redshirt freshman last season.

Virginia Tech also has two backs in David Wilson and Josh Oglesby who would start for some other ACC teams.

Wilson, who averaged an eye-popping 5.7 yards per carry last year, is the third-team tailback. Oglesby has been moved to fullback after rushing for 335 yards in 2009.

"I think it's going to be pretty good," Evans says of the backfield. "Ryan is really explosive, probably one of the best I've ever played with, probably one of the best in the nation. And then I think we all just bring something different to the table."

Indeed, the entire makeup of the team is different from what Beamer traditionally coaches at Virginia Tech. The Hokies have become known for defeating opponents with big plays on defense and special teams.

But both of those units are inexperienced this season. End Jason Worlds

BULLET POINTS

- ➔ By leading the ACC in pass efficiency last season, QB Tyrod Taylor proved he's not limited to making plays with his feet.
- ➔ This team is shaky on defense and special teams by Tech standards.
- ➔ A healthy Darren Evans' power in the backfield combined with Ryan Williams' speed will make a devastating combo.

THE NEXT BIG THING

LOGAN THOMAS, QB

The redshirt freshman is remarkably athletic at 6-6 and 230 pounds. He may serve as the backup quarterback, but he's also too talented to spend the whole season holding a clipboard.

and linebacker Cody Grimm are among the five starters missing from a defense that gave up an ACC-low 15.6 points per game last season.

Punter Brent Bowden and placekicker Matt Waldron are also gone.

"We feel good about our players," Beamer says. "We feel good about our talent level. I'm concerned about the lack of experience at a lot of positions defensively and a lack of experience in our kicking game."

Instead, Virginia Tech has a lot of talent at the skill positions. It starts at quarterback, where Tyrod Taylor finally has become a good enough passer to give the Hokies the versatility they need to be a top-notch offense.

Last season as a junior, Taylor led the ACC in passing efficiency and threw 13 touchdown passes with just five interceptions. The improved passing, along with his speed and elusiveness as a runner, make Taylor one of the most dangerous QBs in the ACC.

Taylor has two excellent returning targets in junior wide receivers Jarrett Boykin and Danny Coale, who both averaged more than 20 yards per catch last season. And the Hokies' backfield depth is nothing short of incredible.

Williams and Evans are listed as co-starters atop the depth chart. Williams has breakaway speed, and Evans is a strong, inside-the-tackles back who's packing even more of a punch after adding about 10 pounds.

"I kind of like the weight," Evans says. "It's bringing me more of that edge because I've been labeled as a power back. So it's given me some weight and I don't think it's slowed me down. I actually believe it's helping me out."

Virginia Tech's offensive line should be solid, too, with starters returning at tackle in Blake DeChristopher, at guard in Jaymes Brooks and at center in Beau Warren. So the Hokies have a chance to have one of their most productive offenses in Beamer's tenure.

The defense loses a lot, though. Junior inside linebacker Barquell Rivers, who ranked second on the team with 96 tackles, is the only player back on the front seven who started more than eight games as the Hokies went 10-3 in 2009. But he's coming back from surgery in March to repair his left quadriceps tendon, which will keep him out five to six months.

Senior cornerback Rashad Carmichael, who intercepted six passes in 2009, is the only player back in the secondary who started more than four games last season.

The coaching staff did some shifting in the spring to fill the holes, moving Jake Johnson from linebacker to defensive end, James Hopper from cornerback to rover safety and Lorenzo Williams from safety to "whip" linebacker.

On special teams, senior Brian Saunders—who's practiced some at QB for the Hokies—has the inside track on the punting job. Justin Myer, Cody Journell and Chris Hazley are among the many players competing for kicking duties.

RECRUITING REPORT

Frank Beamer and Virginia Tech quietly put together a top-25 class in 2010. The Hokies filled needs across the board with 20 commitments.

Laurence Gibson, the No. 2 prep school prospect in the nation out of Hargrave Military Academy, is the most highly touted recruit in the class. The massive tackle has good feet for his 6-6 frame. He has the chance to be a major cog in the Virginia Tech offense for years to come.

Gibson was just one in an impressive haul on the offensive line for the Hokies. Virginia Tech signed five offensive linemen, including four-star standout Mark Shuman (brother of former Hokies player Ryan Shuman).

With Tyrod Taylor's impending departure after this season, Virginia Tech filled a critical need at quarterback with Mark Leal and Ricardo Young. Both fit the Hokies' need for a dual-threat QB with good arm strength and accuracy. Both, however, will likely need some time to bulk up.

Coordinator Bud Foster's defense added plenty of speed and size, most notably speedy rush end Zack McCray, massive tackle Nick Acree and versatile defensive back Nick Dew, who could move to linebacker.

BOWL PROJECTION

MEINEKE CAR CARE

Georgia Tech's hopes for repeating as ACC champion now rest squarely on the shoulders of senior quarterback Josh Nesbitt.

Four players who would have been senior leaders on this team—running back Jonathan Dwyer, defensive end Derrick Morgan, wide receiver Demaryius Thomas and safety Morgan Burnett—left school early for the NFL draft.

But having Nesbitt back from the team that went 11-3 and played in the Orange Bowl last season gives the Yellow Jackets a good foundation. Nesbitt, who rushed for 1,037 yards in 2009, skillfully runs Georgia Tech's "flexbone" option attack under coach Paul Johnson.

Now, with so many talented teammates gone, Nesbitt has to be even more of a leader. He's ready for the role.

"I'm just going out there and being myself," he says, "just letting guys know they can count on me."

They will need to. Georgia Tech has to replace Dwyer, Thomas and three starting linemen from an offense that averaged an ACC-high 33.8 points per game last season.

Talented Anthony Allen is moving from A-back to B-back to take over for Dwyer, who rushed for 1,395 yards last season. With Allen, Nesbitt and All-ACC center Sean Bedford, the Yellow Jackets should be strong up the middle of the field—although the wide receiver position will be a question mark.

In an effort to improve a defense that gave up 24.8 points per game last season, Johnson has hired former Virginia head coach Al Groh to implement a 3-4 scheme. Although Groh's prickliness sometimes rubbed fans the wrong way at Virginia, no one doubts his intelligence or his ability to coach the 3-4.

"It's been a tough defense to play against, and they're looking really good out there (in practice)," Nesbitt says. "The way we move people around, it just confuses quarterbacks."

Linebacker Brad Jefferson, who led the team with 95 tackles last season, is one of eight returning starters on the defense. He should emerge as a leader on that side of the ball, along with cornerback Mario Butler and safety Mario Edwards.

Placekicker Scott Blair and punter Chandler Anderson also return, so the Yellow Jackets should be in good position on special teams. And if their production dips a bit on offense, their defense might improve enough to compensate.

A schedule that includes nonconference road games at Georgia and Kansas could be a challenge. But Georgia Tech has a quarterback who has taken the ball into his own hands to help win a conference title in the fourth quarter.

THE NEXT BIG THING SHAWN GREEN, DT

The freshman excels in clogging up the middle of the field and might have a chance to play early in first-year coordinator Al Groh's new 3-4 defense.

That's a valuable asset, especially when he is determined that the team can repeat.

"That's the way I was brought up," Nesbitt says. "I was brought up to never give in to a challenge."

5-YEAR WINS TREND

If you didn't know better, you would have thought North Carolina was a "football school" this spring.

The Tar Heels' basketball team didn't make the NCAA tournament, and an announced crowd of 29,500 showed up for North Carolina's spring football game, which was televised by ESPN.

"They filled up doggone near half the stadium," defensive tackle Marvin Austin recalls. "And I don't think that's ever been done in the history of the university for a spring game. People are very excited about football here."

In coach Butch Davis' fourth season, UNC has the talent on defense to match that excitement. In Austin, end Robert Quinn, linebackers Quan Sturdivant and Bruce Carter and safety Deunta Williams, the Tar Heels have five players with first-round NFL draft potential in 2011.

So a defense that gave up just 17.1 points per game in 2009, second best in the ACC, should get even better.

But North Carolina's offense could be a problem again, starting with the quarterback position. Senior T.J. Yates has passed for 5,939 yards in his career, but threw more interceptions (15) than TD passes last season and often overthrew open receivers.

Although Davis values Yates' experience, redshirt freshman Bryn Renner has a chance to unseat him in the fall.

"We won't determine who the starting quarterback is going to be until probably 10 days out from the first game," Davis says. "T.J. has earned the opportunity to be the guy who wins the job or loses the job, and I think Bryn has put himself in position to unbelievably push and compete for the job or significant playing time."

The Tar Heels have experience in the backfield in Shaun Draughn, Ryan Houston and Johnny White, but none of them have been spectacular. Better production from an offensive line that returns four starters, including standout guard Alan Pelc, could help the running game, though.

And capable pass catchers such as wideout Greg Little and tight end Zack Pianalto may take some of the pressure off Yates. If they can, this team could be outstanding because the defense should be excellent.

There's not a better way to start a defensive line than with Austin and Quinn (11 sacks)—although the Tar Heels have to fill in some of the positions around them. The speed of Carter and Sturdivant as the outside linebackers makes it difficult to run wide on North Carolina, and Kevin Reddick strengthened the defense in the middle late last season.

THE NEXT BIG THING BRYN RENNER, QB

The redshirt freshman has the strong arm and mobility you'd expect from a first baseman and outfielder on the UNC baseball team, and has a chance to unseat senior T.J. Yates in fall camp.

Defensive tackle Nick Jenkins says Virginia's players have never had so much fun.

Mike London, a fiery ball of energy who has taken over for the fired Al Groh as the Cavaliers' coach, has brought excitement and enthusiasm to a team that suffered through a 3-9 season in 2009.

"It's been nothing but positive since the day he walked in," Jenkins says. "Everything now is 110 miles an hour. He's just such an upbeat guy."

London, the former Richmond coach, has been known to sprint down the field to congratulate defensive players who return interceptions for touchdowns in practice. In a move that could pay dividends in the critical Hampton Roads (Va.) recruiting area, London held a spring practice session at Old Dominion University.

A crowd of 3,000 showed up, and London spent most of the day grinning from ear to ear.

"We're trying to cultivate our fan base; get them back, get them behind us again," London says.

It will take more than passion to turn around this team, though, and the Cavaliers face questions in some key areas. Marc Verica, a senior who threw 16 interceptions with eight touchdown passes in 2008, is the likely starter at quarterback.

London wants to build his offense around a physical running game and will have to count on inexperienced backs to do it. The Cavaliers will likely work as a backfield by committee, with physical Dominique Wallace being the power back and Perry Jones and Torrey Mack serving as speed backs.

Virginia should be solid on the offensive and defensive lines. Guards Austin Pasztor and B.J. Cabbell and tackle Landon Bradley return as starters on the offensive line, which will benefit from a move back to a smash-mouth style after the spread offense that was a poor fit last season.

On defense, starters return at tackle (Jenkins and Matt Conrath) and on the ends (Cam Johnson). They will adjust—along with a linebacker group led by promising sophomore Steve Greer—to the 4-3 alignment London prefers after playing in a 3-4 scheme under Groh.

London says the moves Virginia is making will increase the team's speed on defense. A quality group of defensive backs, led by cornerback Ras-I Dowling, should prevent opponents from making big plays. The Cavaliers also have dependable specialists back in punter Jimmy Howell and placekicker Robert Randolph.

Juwan Thompson RB, 5-11, 205 Thompson is a huge, physical back from Georgia who will move the chains for Duke and allow the offense to wear down opponents.

David Cutcliffe has accomplished a lot in two seasons as Duke's football coach.

His nine wins over those two campaigns (including a 5-7 record in 2009) exceeded the Blue Devils' total for the previous five years before he arrived.

And, in a stunning move, Cutcliffe declined an opportunity after last season to return to his coaching roots at Tennessee in order to stay at Duke.

"This shows that he practices what he preaches," Blue Devils running back Jay Hollingsworth says. "He talks about commitment, and he is committed to this program."

Nonetheless, it won't be easy for Cutcliffe to continue his program's momentum this season. Quarterback Thaddeus Lewis, the school-record holder with 10,065 career passing yards, is gone. So are five starters from the 2009 defense.

One thing about the team's personality that Cutcliffe wants to change is its ability to rush the passer, particularly off the edge, and that won't be easy with standout tackle Vince Oghobaase and end Ayanga Okpokowuruk gone. The Blue Devils had just 19 sacks last season, 11th in the ACC.

End Patrick Egboh and nose guard Charlie Hatcher will figure prominently in Cutcliffe's pass-rush plans. At linebacker, Duke returns starters Abraham Kromah and Damian Thornton, who will move from the outside to the middle to replace departed second-team All-ACC selection Vinny Rey.

Cutcliffe is encouraged by the secondary, where safety Matt Daniels (83 tackles last season) and cornerback Chris Rwabukamba are back, and multitasking Johnny Williams has moved from wide receiver to cornerback.

Williams' move from wideout illustrates the depth Duke has at that position. Austin Kelly, Donovan Varner and Conner Vernon all caught at least 50 passes last season.

The Blue Devils also have reliable pass catchers at tight end in Brett Huffman and Brandon King.

Duke's offensive line should be a position of strength, too. Starters Kyle Hill, Mitchell Lederman, Brian Moore and Bryan Morgan all return.

But the backfield is a huge question mark. Sophomore quarterback Sean Renfree came off the bench to lead Duke to a comeback win over Army last year, but is still a first-year starter and missed most of spring practice while recovering from a knee injury. Duke has its three top rushers returning in Desmond Scott, Hollingsworth and Patrick Kurunwune, but averaged an abysmal 63.5 rushing yards per game last season.

Punter Kevin Jones and placekicker Will Snyderwine are back on a special teams unit that has become a strength for Duke under Cutcliffe after years of floundering under predecessor Ted Roof.

THE NEXT BIG THING JOSH SNEAD, RB

The highly recruited freshman, a small (5-9, 180 pounds) and speedy rusher who enrolled early, participated in spring practice and could help at a position of need.

Once given up for dead, Big East is now must-see TV

By Pete Williams, Correspondent

Anyone looking for dynasties, perennial powers and continuity among players and coaching staffs should look anywhere but the Big East. No league provides more turnover and fast-changing plot lines, which makes it arguably the most exciting conference in college football.

Four of the eight teams employ a head coach in his first or second season. Brian Kelly, who won the last two conference titles at Cincinnati, left for Notre Dame. While in South Bend, he might discover, like Bobby Petrino and Rich Rodriguez before him, that the Big East gig he left behind might have been more attractive.

It speaks volumes about how far the Big East has come that Cincinnati and West Virginia could be considered as prestigious as Notre Dame and Michigan. No longer is the conference considered the fluky recipient of a BCS bowl bid. Instead, it's the exciting, unpredictable, must-see weeknight TV starring teams nobody wants to risk scheduling.

If it's not Pittsburgh, Rutgers and West Virginia becoming powers in the northeast, it's South Florida emerging as a thorn in the side of the Big Three in the Sunshine State. If Florida, Miami and Florida State coaches worry about Big East teams poaching talent from their state now, how will they feel once former Gators defensive coordinator Charlie Strong gets rolling in Louisville?

Think how scary the Big East might be once the teams reload with long-term quarterbacks. Entering spring practice, the only team with a signal-caller who started all of last season was Rutgers, which played top recruit Tom Savage as a true freshman.

In 2009, six of the league's eight teams finished with a record of 8-5 or better, which is impressive considering Big East teams played tough nonleague schedules and went 4-2 in bowl games.

The Big East is known for its parity, but this season it may be the best it's ever been now that coach Doug Marrone has Syracuse fans optimistic for the first time in years and Strong is looking to return Louisville to the national powerhouse it was four seasons ago under Petrino.

RECRUITING ROUNDUP By Mike Farrell, Rivals.com

1. WEST VIRGINIA The Mountaineers signed only 20 prospects, but there are quality players, such as receivers Deon Long and Ivan McCartney.
2. PITTSBURGH The Panthers got plenty of talent at the offensive skill positions, as well as ends T.J. Clemmings and Bryan Murphy on defense.
3. LOUISVILLE Charlie Strong showed his recruiting skills, bringing in a quality class in short order. Florida wide receiver Michael Harris and Ohio athlete Dominique Brown are big-time talents.
4. CINCINNATI Coaching changes can hurt recruiting efforts, but the Bearcats managed to reel in some talent despite the loss of Brian Kelly to Notre Dame. Wide receivers Djuan Lewis and Kenbrell Thompkins are the gems of this class.
5. SOUTH FLORIDA The Bulls didn't need a huge haul, but there are some potential stars in Tampa cornerback Terrence Mitchell and Miami defensive tackle Todd Chandler.

6. RUTGERS This wasn't Greg Schiano's best class, but the Scarlet Knights did address some needs. Maryland wide receiver Greg Coleman and cornerback Rashad Knight were key late signings.

7. SYRACUSE This incoming class won't enjoy a lofty ranking, but recruiting improved for Syracuse this year. There are some quality linebackers, led by Marquis Spruill of Fork Union and Pittsburgh running back Dom Timbers.

8. CONNECTICUT Once again, the Huskies found some players they hope will fit into their system, which is how they've been successful in recent years. There isn't a headliner in this group, but three quality defensive backs may prove to be the most important additions.

FOUR FEARLESS FORECASTS

- 1 Despite the lack of experienced quarterbacks throughout the league, the Big East will get big performances from Tom Savage, B.J. Daniels, Zach Collaros and Geno Smith.
- 2 After winning at Florida State last year, South Florida will give Urban Meyer and Florida a scare in Gainesville before coming up short.
- 3 Charlie Strong will quickly establish himself as the league's best recruiter, returning to the Sunshine State frequently to lure top talent to Louisville.
- 4 After coming so close to sending a team to a BCS title game in recent seasons, the Big East will send either Pittsburgh or West Virginia this year.

ASCENDING

SYRACUSE ▶ Baby steps for the Orange, who won four games in 2009 and have the talent under new coach Doug Marrone to be better in 2010.

DESCENDING

SOUTH FLORIDA ▶ The long-term outlook under Skip Holtz is promising, but the Bulls will take a step back for a year or two while Holtz rebuilds the program in his image.

THE NEXT BIG THING DAN MASON, MLB

A four-star recruit in 2009, Mason played in every game as a true freshman and could become the Panthers' fourth straight all-conference middle linebacker.

At 6-5, Baldwin is a huge target with a big vertical leap. He's also a deep threat, having hauled in touchdown catches of 79 and 71 yards last season. Mike Shanahan projects as the other starter after a promising freshman season.

Like most everyone else in the Big East, the Panthers have an unsettled quarterback situation following the departure of all-conference performer Bill Stull. Junior Pat Bostick, who redshirted last season, has made nine Coaches have been fired after winning more games than the 16 victories Dave Wannstedt managed in his first three seasons at his alma mater. But after winning 10 in 2009, the former NFL coach was rewarded with a two-year contract extension that will keep him with the Panthers until 2014.

It helped that Pitt won its first bowl game since 2002 (over North Carolina in the Meineke Car Care Bowl), which served as consolation for heartbreaking losses to West Virginia and Cincinnati following a 9-1 start. It also helped that Wannstedt's early recruiting classes have begun to bear fruit.

This year's Panthers should contend for a Big East title because of two of Wannstedt's biggest recruits. Dion Lewis stepped in last season to fill the void left by LeSean McCoy, rushing for 1,799 yards and 17 touchdowns as a true freshman. The 5-8 sparkplug drew comparisons to Heisman Trophy winner Tony Dorsett while garnering honors for Big East Offensive Player of the Year and Rookie of the Year.

Without Jonathan Baldwin has dominated Big East competition, hauling in 57 catches for 1,111 yards and eight TDs last season. He could become the third Panther to win the Biletnikoff Award, following Antonio Bryant and Larry Fitzgerald.

starts. Sophomore Tino Sunseri played sparingly as Stull's backup, but is thought to have greater upside.

Pitt fielded the nation's best pair of tight ends last season in graduated stars Nate Byham and Dorin Dickerson. Sophomores Mike Cruz and Justin Virbitsky return, along with Virginia transfer Andrew Devlin and redshirt freshman Brock DeCicco, a former prep All-American.

Pitt's offensive line will attempt to produce a 1,000-yard rusher for a fourth consecutive season. Senior Jason Pinkston, an All-Big East selection, and junior Lucas Nix return at tackles, though the other three spots are up for grabs.

Junior Chris Jacobson made a surprise start at left guard during the bowl game and appears ready for a full-time gig. Senior Alex Karabin will look to seize the center position after spending two years on special teams.

Pitt led the nation in sacks (47) last fall, with the defensive line responsible for 37. The Panthers return one of the nation's better end combos in Greg Romeus and Jabaal Sheard, who shared the 2009 Big East Defensive Player of the Year award.

Junior Myles Caragein (5 sacks) projects as the starting nose tackle. Junior Chas Alecxih (4) figures to be the other starting tackle.

Pitt has fielded an all-conference middle linebacker for five straight seasons (H.B. Blades, Scott McKillop, Adam Gunn), and Dan Mason could join them. He played in every game as a true freshman in '09.

Greg Williams is a three-year starter at strongside linebacker, and Max Gruder is back beside him at the weak side after leading the team with 91 tackles as a junior.

At 6-3 and 230 pounds, safety Dom DeCicco (88 tackles, 3 INTs) has the size of a linebacker. At the other safety spot, Jarred Holley stepped into the starting lineup when Andrew Taglianetti sustained a season-ending knee injury. Taglianetti took a medical redshirt and is expected to be at full strength by August. Ricky Gary, Antwan Reed and junior college transfer Saheed Imoru are the leading candidates to fill the cornerback spots vacated by Jovani Chappel and all-conference performer Aaron Berry.

RECRUITING REPORT

The Panthers have one of the top recruiting staffs in the Big East, along with one of the top talent bases. Those are two of the reasons Pitt was able to put together one of the league's best classes yet again in 2010.

Not surprisingly, most of Pitt's recruits hail from states bordering the Eastern Seaboard. Of the 24 prospects who signed, 10 are from Pennsylvania, five from Ohio and four from New Jersey. Coach Dave Wannstedt went as far west as Texas and as far south as Virginia to fill out the class.

Defensive ends T.J. Clemmings and Bryan Murphy are the Nos. 2 and 3 prospects in New Jersey, respectively. Both are physically mature for their age.

Cleveland St. Ignatius quarterback Mark Myers is a pro-style passer and a four-star prospect. He did a great job of taking care of the football during his high school career. At 6-4 and 220 pounds, he has prototypical size and could be an NFL prospect one day.

At 6-3 and 216 pounds, wide receiver Todd Thomas is the best skill-position prospect in the class. He's very strong for a player of his size, and a year at Milford Academy in New York has helped him develop into a college-ready player who could make an early impact.

Thomas is joined by four other quality receivers from Pennsylvania. The Panthers are hoping their trio of running backs can help provide depth behind Dion Lewis, the star of the 2009 class. Derrick Burns and Andre Givens are the two most highly touted incoming backs.

2 WEST VIRGINIA MOUNTAINEERS

NOEL DEVINE, RB

Bill Stewart has won "only" nine games in each of his first two seasons as head coach, leading some fans to half-jokingly suggest West Virginia is now a basketball school after Bob Huggins' crew reached the Final Four.

Predecessor Rich Rodriguez won 11 games in each of his final three seasons before bolting for Ann Arbor, but Stewart has all of the pieces in place to make another run at a national championship.

The only missing link is at quarterback where the Mountaineers do not have an experienced signal-caller for the first time in five years. Either Geno Smith or Coley White, Jarrett Brown's backups last season, will get the nod.

Smith, who showed poise last year, is the favorite despite breaking a bone in his foot during offseason workouts.

Few quarterbacks have more weapons at their disposal, since playmakers Noel Devine and Jock Sanders postponed the NFL for another year in Morgantown. Devine rushed for a career-best 1,465 yards, caught 22 passes for 177 more and accounted for 14 touchdowns.

Sanders led the Mountaineers with 72 catches for 688 yards and was also their top punt returner. Junior Brad Starks (29 catches, 405 yards) averaged a team-high 14 yards per catch last season and will be called upon to fill the void left by Alric Arnett. Receivers Logan Heastie and

- Sophomores Geno Smith and Coley White will have to step up to succeed Jarrett Brown at quarterback.
- Noel Devine and Jock Sanders are motivated to prove they made the right decisions to return for another year.
- Can the Mountaineers continue their unbeaten streak at home?

MEINEKE CAR CARE BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING DEON LONG, WR

Long enrolled in January after spending a season in prep school, only to leave the team in April. If he returns, the explosive receiver from Dunbar High in Washington, D.C., could make an immediate impact.

Deon Long were not with the team as of early April, and their status for 2010 was uncertain at press time.

Bruising fullback Ryan Clarke emerged as another weapon, complementing the elusive Devine, and finished with 250 yards and eight touchdowns.

The Mountaineers return most of an offensive line that led the Big East in rushing yards for the sixth time in the last seven years. The line produced a 1,000-yard rusher for the 14th time in 15 seasons and its first 2,000-yard passer since 1998.

Left tackle Don Barclay and left guard Josh Jenkins return to their same positions. Center Joe Madsen was an All-Big East Freshman selection last season after playing center and guard. Eric Jobe also played center and guard but will fill in at right guard. Matt Timmerman is the leading candidate to replace Selvish Capers, a second-team all-conference right tackle.

The Mountaineers return nine starters to a defensive unit that ranked in the middle of the pack last season. The front line of Scooter Berry, Chris Neild and Julian Miller (team-high 9 sacks) returns intact. Berry and Neild will be starting for the third straight year.

All-conference linebacker J.T. Thomas returns for a third season as the starter at the weakside position and senior Pat Lazear will be a regular for the second time on the strong side. Anthony Leonard is the leading candidate to replace Reed Williams in the middle.

The Mountaineers return four starters to their unusual five-man secondary. Left corner Brandon Hogan, an all-conference selection, led the team with 11 pass breakups and 46 solo tackles. Free safety Robert Sands, another All-Big East selection, led the league in passes defended (13) and tied for the lead in interceptions (5).

Keith Tandy starts at right corner for the second season and defensive playmaker Sidney Glover also returns, moving from the "spur" to "bandit" safety position. Sophomore Terence Garvin was moved to spur in the spring.

Kicker Tyler Bitancourt had a stellar freshman year, earning first-team all-conference honors after connecting on 13 of 15 field goal attempts. Nobody has enjoyed better punting in recent years than the Mountaineers with Pat McAfee and, most recently, Scott Kozlowski. There's no immediate successor of that caliber, though.

The Mountaineers stack their special teams, assigning their stars to return duties. Sanders and Hogan will split time running back punts. Sanders, Devine and backup running back Shawne Alston will share the kickoff duties.

RECRUITING REPORT

The Big East's top class belongs to West Virginia, and it doesn't take long to explain why. The Mountaineers, who have built their program around speed, have plenty of that coming in at the skill positions in this group.

The state of West Virginia is never going to supply the program with a lot of top-flight prospects, so the Mountaineers have done a good job of building pipelines to other regions. This class is filled with recruits from different states east of the Mississippi, as well as a couple west of it.

Miramar High School in Florida supplied WVU with perhaps its best recruit in wide receiver Ivan McCartney. The 6-3, 180-pound prospect needs to gain some weight and improve his strength, but his athleticism and ball skills make him an incredible prospect with a world of potential. Fellow four-star receiver Deon Long spent a year prepping at Hargrave Military Academy. While he may lack McCartney's athleticism, Long has a stronger build.

Barry Brunetti was the nation's No. 3 dual-threat quarterback. He lacks ideal size, but may prove to be a great fit in West Virginia's spread offense. At 6-5 and 330 pounds, offensive guard Quinton Spain could be the best NFL prospect if he can keep his weight in check.

Junior college linebacker Bruce Irvin is one of the best defensive recruits to come along for West Virginia in some time. Irvin has the build and physical tools to compete for a starting spot from the first day he arrives on campus. Defensive backs Travis Bell and Mike Dorsey could make an early impact.

Randy Edsall and the Huskies put together another strong season in 2009, overcoming the October murder of cornerback Jasper Howard to win their last four games, including a bowl upset of South Carolina. Connecticut has won at least eight games in each of the last three seasons. Not bad for a program still in only its 10th year of FBS competition.

Like everyone in the Big East, the Huskies have an unsettled quarterback situation, though there are two experienced options in senior Zach Frazer, who started the last five games of 2009, and junior Cody Endres, who made six starts when Frazer was out with a knee injury.

Jordan Todman is the latest in a line of UConn running backs to put up big numbers, rushing for 1,188 yards in 2009, including five games of 100-plus yards. He runs behind an experienced line that includes All-Big East guard Zach Hurd and center Moe Petrus.

As usual, the Huskies' attack will depend on the running game, but they'll need several young receivers to step up to keep defenses honest. Juniors Kashif Moore (22 receptions) and Isiah Moore (24) are the top returnees. One candidate for a breakout season is sophomore Dwayne Difton, who headlined the 2009 recruiting class.

Eight starters return to a defense that was last in the Big East in pass defense and must replace its best cover man in Robert Vaughn, along with safety Robert McClain. The secondary already was thin following the death of Howard, who would have been a senior this fall. The unit also will transition following the departure of assistant Scott Lakatos, who joined the Georgia staff. Sophomores Bliid Wreh-Wilson and Dwayne Gratz will be the cornerbacks. Jerome Junior returns at safety.

Edsall will offset the loss of all-conference defensive end Lindsey Witten by moving Greg Lloyd from linebacker, where he was a second-team All-Big East performer with 91 tackles. End Trevardo Williams played in all 13 games as a true freshman. There's experience at tackle with redshirt juniors Twyon Martin and Kendall Reyes.

Edsall has a track record of shuffling players and positions to maximize talent, and his chess moves for 2010 do not stop with Lloyd. Fifth-year senior Scott Lutrus, an all-conference player in 2008, will move from strongside linebacker to the middle. Converted safety Kijuan Dabney will compete with Jory Johnson for the opening on the strong side. Lawrence Wilson returns at the weak side, where he led the team in tackles (140) and earned All-Big East honors.

At punter, redshirt freshman Chad Christen will replace Desi

He also has good leaping ability, which makes him a downfield threat.	3 Jonathan Louis DE 6-5, 240 With his size, Louis has potential against the run, but he isn't as good a pass-rushing threat as classmate Reuben Frank.	4 Taylor Mack CB 5-9, 160 Mack won't be ready to make an impact right away, but he plays bigger than his size and is adept at covering bigger receivers.	5 Greg McKee OT 6-7, 295 McKee passes the eyeball test with his massive size. 5-YEAR WINS TREND

All Cincinnati has to do to threepeat as Big East champions is replace the conference's most productive quarterback and wide receiver/return man, along with three other players who appeared on All-Big East first or second teams last year. And they'll have to do it all without the coach who, in just three seasons, turned the Bearcats into a national power before bolting for Notre Dame.

That's a tall order, especially in a league as unpredictable as the Big East. That, ironically, may be why the Bearcats could be within striking distance of title contention again this year.

Butch Jones succeeds Brian Kelly, as he did at Central Michigan, and knows how to win, having led teams to three straight bowl games at CMU. Quarterback Zach Collaros should be an adequate successor to Tony Pike and Vidal Hazelton could ease the loss of Mardy Gilyard, the two-time All-Big East wide receiver and Special Teams Player of the Year. Collaros passed for 1,434 yards and 10 touchdowns and rushed for 344 yards while Pike was injured last season. Collaros is shorter but more athletic than Pike. When Pike hurt his forearm at South Florida, Collaros entered the game and embarked on a 75-yard TD run that broke the game open.

Hazelton was USC's second-leading receiver with 50 catches for 540 yards and four touchdowns in 2007. He was slowed by injuries in 2008 and transferred to Cincinnati, hoping to play right away. The NCAA turned down his request, leaving him with one year of eligibility. He could give the Bearcats another deep threat to go with senior Armon Binns (61 catches, 888 yards, 11 TDs) and junior D.J. Woods (51 catches, 640 yards). Tight end Ben Guidugli (27, 364) earned second-team all-conference honors last fall.

Tailback Isaiah Pead (806 yards, 9 TDs) was a huge recruiting coup in 2008 when he picked Cincinnati over Pitt and West Virginia. Those schools have more high-profile backs in Dion Lewis and Noel Devine, respectively, but Pead belongs in the conversation after averaging 6.7 yards a carry last season. He will again rely on guards Alex Hoffman and Jason Kelce, both of whom were second-team all-conference picks last season.

The Bearcats aren't as loaded on defense with the departure of ends Ricardo Mathews and Alex Daniels plus safety Aaron Webster. That makes the shift to a 4-3 defense more challenging. Tackle Derek Wolfe is a budding star against the run, while ends Dan Giordano and Brandon Mills impressed as freshmen.

Hard-hitting safety Drew Frey was awarded a sixth year of eligibility after enduring injury-plagued seasons in 2007 and '08. A star runner, wideout and kicker, he's only a redshirt sophomore after making the Big East All-Freshman team at age 20.

THE NEXT BIG THING BRANDON MILLS, DE

Long overlooked because of his height (5-10), Mills just makes plays. An all-conference freshman last year, he'll be counted on in the Bearcats' new 4-3 defense.

5 RUTGERS SCARLET KNIGHTS

R

SCARLET KNIGHTS • SCARLET KNIGHTS • SCARLET KNIGHTS • SCARLET KNIGHTS

Tom Savage enters the 2010 season as the most experienced quarterback in the Big East and arguably the best. That speaks volumes about the turnover at the position throughout the conference, but the sophomore is emerging as one of the nation's young stars.

The most touted recruit in the history of Rutgers football, Savage lived up to expectations last season, passing for 2,211 yards and 14 touchdowns while leading the Scarlet Knights to their fifth consecutive bowl and fourth postseason win.

With prototypical size (6-5, 230 pounds) and a strong arm, Savage also has other weapons at his disposal. Junior Joe Martinek (206 carries, 967 yards) was the team's leading rusher last season and De'Antwan "The Rocket" Williams (235 yards), like Savage, made an impact as a true freshman.

Savage will miss Tim Brown, who left as the school's all-time leader in receiving touchdowns, but former high school safety Mohamed Sanu (51 catches, 639 yards) figures to emerge as the top deep threat. Last year Sanu became the first Scarlet Knight since 1993 to score via passing, rushing and receiving in the same season.

Rutgers must rebuild an offensive line that lost three anchors in tackles Kevin Haslam and Anthony Davis, along with center Ryan Blaszczyk. Starting guards Howard Barbieri and Art Forst return, though Forst could move to tackle. Redshirt freshman Antwan Lowery, one of the nation's top defensive-line recruits a year ago, moved to the offensive front in the spring and could make an immediate impact.

The Knights fielded one of the nation's best defenses last season, ranking first in fumbles recovered and tackles for loss and second in turnover margin. Rutgers finished fourth nationally in sacks and also led the Big East in total defense and scoring defense.

A number of key contributors from that unit return, especially on the line. Senior Alex Silvestro has thrived since shifting from tackle to end, making 12 tackles for loss last season. Both starting tackles return in fifth-year senior Charlie Noonan and Scott Vallone, a Freshman All-American in 2009. Senior Jonathan Freeny will likely step into the other starting end position after spending the past three seasons backing up graduated George Johnson.

Antonio Lowery (55 tackles) is the team's top returning tackler and one of two linebackers with starting experience. Steve Beauharnais emerged as last season progressed and finished with 36 tackles, including five sacks. Two starters return in the secondary: safety Joe Lefeged and cornerback David Rowe.

Rutgers returns both its starting punter, Teddy Dellaganna, and kicker in San San Te.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

For the first time since the inception of South Florida's football program in 1995, the Bulls begin a season without Jim Leavitt, who was fired in January after a school investigation revealed that he struck a player in the locker room during halftime of a November game.

Leavitt built the program from scratch to a No. 2 BCS rating early in the 2007 season, but his tightly wound personality rubbed some the wrong way long before USF welcomed Skip Holtz from East Carolina as its new coach.

Holtz inherits a Bulls program that has made five straight bowl appearances and won at least eight games in each of the last four seasons. But the program has fallen into a holding pattern in recent years of starting strong and knocking off prominent nonconference opponents before struggling in November and backing into a third-tier bowl.

The Bulls must replace quarterback Matt Grothe and defensive end George Selvie, the best offensive and defensive players in school history. They've gotten used to life without Grothe, who went down with a knee injury early last season and was replaced by B.J. Daniels.

Senior Moise Plancher (581 yards) is the Bulls' top returning rusher and will benefit from an experienced line that includes guards Chaz Hine and Jeremiah Warren, right tackle Jacob Sims and center Sampson Genus, a second-team all-conference performer last year. Mark Popek and Jamar Bass will compete to start at left tackle.

The Bulls must replace Carlton Mitchell, last year's top receiver, but they have returning experience with Dontavia Bogan and Sterling Griffin. Lindsey Lamar, a converted running back, will line up at receiver.

Mark Snyder is the Bulls' third defensive coordinator in as many seasons. He must rebuild a unit that sent five players to the NFL: Selvie, Jason Pierre-Paul, Nate Allen, Kion Wilson and Jerome Murphy.

Snyder's base defense is a five-man front with two linebackers. The new starters have experience with defensive ends David Bedford and Craig Marshall, middle linebacker Sam Barrington, cornerback Kayvon Webster and Mistral Raymond at free safety. Webster and Barrington were members of the Big East All-Freshman Team. Holtz' top two recruits—tackle Todd Chandler and cornerback Terrence Mitchell—could make an impact as true freshmen.

For years USF has been on the verge of joining Florida, Florida State and Miami in a true "Big Four" of Sunshine State football. In Holtz, the Bulls might have the personality to pull it off. But with new schemes and not much depth, Holtz might need to take a step back before reemerging into contention in 2011.

THE NEXT BIG THING RYNE GIDDINS, DE

The redshirt freshman chose USF over Florida, FSU and Miami, and is a high-motor defender who could step in and fill the void left by George Selvie and Jason Pierre-Paul.

7 LOUISVILLE CARDINALS

CARDINALS • CARDINALS • CARDINALS • CARDINALS

It's hard to believe it was only 2006 when the Cardinals went 12-1 and won the Big East championship and the Orange Bowl in Bobby Petrino's final season as Louisville coach.

That was two jobs ago for Petrino, and the three-year tenure of his successor, Steve Kragthorpe, was a disaster. Enter Charlie Strong, who brings 27 years of experience as an assistant, a "play-tough" mindset and many of the same schemes and philosophies installed by his old boss Urban Meyer at Florida.

Strong is known as an effective recruiter, which is a good thing because Kragthorpe left the cupboard bare. At quarterback, Louisville enters 2010 with uncertainty. Adam Froman, a Junior College All-American in 2008, made seven starts last season and threw for 1,354 yards and six TDs. If the senior can stay healthy, he's the best fit for the spread-style offense installed at Louisville. If not, senior Justin Burke and sophomore Will Stein will get a look.

Victor Anderson rushed for 1,047 yards as a freshman in 2008 but only 473 last year, missing four games due to a shoulder injury. Anderson was held out of contact drills during the spring and was already being pushed by Bilal Powell (392 yards, 4 TDs) and Darius Ashley (462, 4), who joined Pittsburgh's Dion Lewis in the backfield of the Big East's All-Freshman team.

Nowhere has the Cardinals' depth dropped off more than at wide receiver, where they entered the spring with just six scholarship players. Senior Doug Beaumont's numbers dipped to 38 catches for 465 yards last season after hauling in 62 passes for 750 yards in '08. Tight end Cameron Graham, a former junior college player, was third on the team in receptions (27 catches, 323 yards) and figures to be one of Froman's top targets.

The offensive line should be a strength, with returning tackles Greg Tomczyk and Jeff Adams. Center Mario Benavides started 12 games as a freshman, and Mark Wetterer is a veteran at right guard.

Strong will have to apply his time and strengths on the defense, both with what he's inherited and what he needs to recruit. Among the building blocks are defensive ends Malcolm Tatum and William Savoy, both of whom started games in 2009.

The linebacking corps must replace top tacklers Jon Dempsey and Chris Campa. Brandon Heath and Antwon Canady figure to play more prominent roles at weakside and middle linebacker, respectively. Sophomore Horace Miller and redshirt freshman Jacob Geffrad figure into the mix at weak side.

The secondary also has questions, but returns senior corner back Johnny Patrick (53 tackles), who played in all 12 games last season, and safety Shenard Holton, who played at the end of last year and could be a breakout performer.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

If nothing else, Doug Marrone has brought optimism back to his alma mater. Last season, the Orange won four games—their most since 2006.

As usual, the Orange will be hard-pressed to rise from the cellar of the Big East, but at least this season they will be nobody's pushover. Redshirt sophomore Ryan Nassib will be the starter at quarterback, though he learned last spring not to take anything for granted.

Last season, Greg Paulus transferred from Duke and was named the starter in the fall after playing basketball for the Blue Devils for four years. But Nassib didn't just ride the bench. He played in nine games and took plenty of snaps as the Orange groomed him for the future. When Paulus struggled against West Virginia, Nassib completed seven of 16 passes for 120 yards and two touchdowns.

The Orange should again have a potent running game behind senior running back Delone Carter. A Sporting News Freshman All-American in 2006, he missed all of 2007 with a dislocated hip and was hampered by hamstring problems in '08. Last season, he returned and rushed for 1,021 yards and 11 TDs.

Syracuse returns most of its offensive line in left guard Adam Rosner, center Ryan Bartholomew and right tackle Josh White. Sophomore Alec Lemon (29 catches, 295 yards) is the top returning receiver from a unit decimated by departures.

Marrone hopes to use the fullback more, but projected starter Carl Cutler tore his left ACL in the spring. Sophomore Adam Harris will move from linebacker to fullback, where he'll compete with former linebacker Shane Kimmel.

The offense should be more explosive, if only because Marrone has appointed himself offensive coordinator. The last time he had that gig, he was guiding Drew Brees and the New Orleans Saints. He does not have that kind of talent in upstate New York, but at least the unit should be more professional.

Six starters return to a defensive unit that will miss nose tackle Arthur Jones, one of the program's all-time greats. Younger brother Chandler Jones returns at defensive end as part of an experienced front four that includes end Mikhail Marinovich and tackle Andrew Lewis.

Derrell Smith has played everywhere—running back, safety, outside linebacker and defensive end—but he's found a home at middle linebacker. He recorded 82 tackles, 6.5 sacks and four forced fumbles in the first 10 games before a knee injury ended his season with two games left.

Doug Hogue will start at the strongside position after moving from running back prior to 2009.

Cornerback Phillip Thomas and safety Shamarko Thomas were named to the Big East All-Freshman team last year and will start as sophomores.

THE NEXT BIG THING PHILLIP THOMAS, CB

One of the Orange's top recruits of '09, Thomas made an impact as a freshman and has the size, speed and leaping ability to be a front-line player.

Big Ten poised to rise from the ashes for a memorable 2010

By Michael Bradley, Correspondent

It happens every so often in the Big Ten: Teams stagger in the postseason. Nonconference performance dips and everybody begins writing the obituaries. Midwestern football is dead.

Heading into last season, the death notices were being prepared again. It didn't help that Ohio State unsuccessfully represented the Big Ten in a pair of BCS title games and then dropped a decision to Texas in the 2009 Fiesta Bowl. Further complicating matters was Michigan's death spiral, which began with that 2007 loss to Appalachian State and continued with a plunge into the conference's basement.

Just as there are downturns for every league, so are there upturns. And all signs point to a rise from the ashes for the Big Ten, which heads into 2010 with a solid postseason résumé, a strong collection of teams at the top, a vibrant middle class and several opportunities to prove its worth this season.

Both Ohio State and Iowa won BCS bowl games last January. Penn State took out LSU on New Years Day, and Wisconsin knocked off a rising Miami outfit. And even though Northwestern fell to Auburn, it traded haymakers with the Tigers and had a chance to win it until the end. Those performances serve as excellent springboards for 2010, as Big Ten teams will begin the season sprinkled throughout the top 25, and the Buckeyes prepare to mount yet another try for the national crown.

Should Ohio State succeed, the return to prominence will be complete. Smaller steps will be taken along the way, particularly if Ohio State bumps off Miami; Penn State handles defending champion Alabama in Tuscaloosa; and Minnesota overcomes USC. Even if the Big Ten teams don't win those games, fans can expect the conference's elite to continue their rise, while Northwestern, Michigan State, Minnesota and Purdue build toward better things.

Of course, not everything is perfect. Michigan needs a big year to keep coach Rich Rodriguez employed, while Illinois' Ron Zook is teetering as well. Indiana needs to show progress, too, or Bill Lynch could find things a little uncomfortable.

RECRUITING ROUNDUP By Greg Ladky, Rivals.com

1. PENN STATE Joe Paterno landed QB Paul Jones, Thomas Ricketts and Miles Diefenbach on offense.
2. MICHIGAN Safety Demar Dorsey committed on signing day; QB Devin Gardner is a perfect fit for Rich Rodriguez's offense.
3. OHIO STATE Three running backs, including Roderick Smith, will help immediately.
4. MICHIGAN STATE William Gholston is the first five-star prospect to sign with Michigan State, who also added defensive end Marcus Rush.
5. IOWA The Hawkeyes addressed a need at linebacker with Austin Gray, James Morris and Jim Poggi.
6. MINNESOTA The Gophers' top two recruits are offensive tackle Jimmy Gjere and athlete Lamonte Edwards.
7. PURDUE Wideout O.J. Ross is a future star of the offense. Purdue landed two standouts in Sean Robinson and Bruce Gaston.
8. ILLINOIS QB Chandler Whitmer will bring consistency to the Illini, who signed five prospects from Florida.
9. NORTHWESTERN The Wildcats added two QBs and three wideouts, along with Chance Carter and Chi Chi Ariguzo on defense.
10. WISCONSIN The Badgers landed seven of the top 11 prospects in Wisconsin, led by safety Michael Trotter.
11. INDIANA The Hoosiers got 14 prospects on defense, including Ishmael Thomas and Matt Zakrzewski.

ASCENDING

PURDUE The Boilermakers may have taken a step back in coach Danny Hope's first year, but Miami transfer Robert Marve will lead them back to a bowl.

DESCENDING

ILLINOIS Although it can't get much worse for the Fighting Illini, they'll sink deeper into trouble and face a big rebuilding project after the season.

FOUR FEARLESS FORECASTS

- 1 After struggling with accuracy issues during his first two seasons at Ohio State, Terrelle Pryor will complete at least 60 percent of his passes.
- 2 After a 2009 season filled with controversy and bad behavior, Michigan State's players will stay out of trouble and rebound from a subpar season with a move into the first division.
- 3 This year will mark the end of the line for Illinois coach Ron Zook, whose team will log another disappointing campaign.
- 4 Ohio State will actually win a BCS national title game.

PICK

TERRELLE PRYOR,
QB

The Buckeyes will have to pardon the nation for wondering who was wearing those scarlet-and-gray uniforms during last January's Rose Bowl. After watching Ohio State stumble around BCS fields for several seasons, the squad that rumbled through Oregon looked unfamiliar.

And how about that quarterback? The announcers kept calling the guy who slashed through Duck defenders with impunity and delivered laser-like strikes into the chests of State's receivers "Terrelle Pryor," but come on now. That guy in Pasadena didn't resemble the mercurial Buckeye, who could look great one game and awful the next (Remember Purdue?).

If indeed the Bucks have it all together, then it may be time for them to eradicate their recent image as regional bullies and step onto the national stage. And, should Pryor be clear of the inconsistency that plagued him during his first two years in Columbus, America will see the dynamic QB that coach Jim Tressel promised when he landed the prodigy back in 2008.

Ohio State has plenty of experience, firepower and swagger. It owns the Big Ten, especially now that Michigan has removed itself from the business of big-time football for the time being. But anybody who knows college football understands the Buckeyes won't be

- ➔ Terrelle Pryor must prove he's more than just a running QB and become more consistent, especially in big games.
- ➔ The defense must find replacements for its two excellent safeties or risk being vulnerable to deep passes.
- ➔ Last year's Rose Bowl win was nice, but the Buckeyes have to beat quality opposition more consistently.

BOWL PROJECTION

BCS NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP

THE NEXT BIG THING JERMALE HINES, S

The senior made 57 tackles and picked off a pair of passes as a reserve in 2009 and should be a top-shelf starting safety this year.

vindicated until they knock off a Big 12 or SEC team on a BCS stage. Winning the Rose Bowl is nice, but for all their '09 success, the Ducks lacked a name brand. Bump off Texas, Alabama, Florida, Oklahoma or USC, and the Bucks can talk.

It's all about Pryor, really. No one can dispute his skill set, as he is virtually impossible to bring down in the open field. His blend of size and speed is rare for a quarterback. Now that he has decided to use his legs to create opportunities in the passing game rather than reprising the performances of Woody Hayes' running quarterbacks (Rex Kern and Cornelius Green), Pryor could be the most dangerous offensive weapon in the country.

The second part of that equation is whether he can be accurate all the time, rather than just in select, three-hour bursts. Last season, Pryor completed a pedestrian 56.6 percent of his passes. At a time when the nation's better quarterbacks are connecting on nearly 70 percent of their throws, that number is inadequate. If Pryor approaches 65 percent, the Buckeye offense will be lethal.

He has the luxury of throwing to his two top receivers again. Junior DeVier Posey (60 catches, 8 TDs) and senior Dane Sanzenbacher (36, 6) can both make big plays and will benefit from defensive breakdowns that occur when Pryor is on the move. Sophomore tight end Jake Stoneburner has the ability to block and get down the field.

Last year, Pryor was the leading Ohio State rusher, something Tressel would like to avoid this season, no matter how effective the QB is with the ball in his hands. That should mean more work for tailbacks Brandon Saine (739 rushing yards) and Dan Herron (600).

As always, the Buckeyes have plenty of depth. Sophomore Jordan Hall has speed and pop, while redshirt freshman Jaamal Berry is healthy after missing last year with a bum hamstring. And look out for true freshman Carlos Hyde (6-0, 235 pounds), who enrolled early.

They'll run behind an experienced line that has put 2008's problems in the rearview mirror. Guard Justin Boren is a terror. If Mike Adams can handle left tackle, Pryor will have plenty of time to pass and the backs will find many seams through which to run.

The OSU defense may take a small step back this season, thanks to holes at tackle and safety. There's no problem at one end spot, where senior Cameron Heyward is ready to land on the national stage. Look out for junior Nathan Williams on the other side, as well. Seniors Ross Homan, who picked off five passes last year, and Brian Rolle are tackling machines at linebacker.

Expect corners Chimdi Chekwa and Devon Torrence to be stout, but the Bucks need to find a pair of safeties. Jermale Hines should be fine at the free spot, while sophomore Orhian Johnson must step up quickly at strong safety.

RECRUITING REPORT

Ohio State recruiting fans have a sour taste in their mouths from signing day. The Buckeyes were looking to add a second offensive tackle to a class that included Andrew Norwell, Ohio's best offensive lineman. The Buckeyes struck out on Seantrel Henderson (USC), Matt James (Notre Dame) and Morgan Moses (Virginia).

Ohio State signed 19 prospects and finished 25th in the national recruiting rankings—its lowest rating in seven years.

The Buckeyes, however, addressed a major need at running back. Fort Wayne (Ind.) Harding product Roderick Smith is a future star. At 6-3 and 220 pounds, Smith not only has the size to wear down defenses but also the speed to break long runs. Corey Brown is another highly touted offensive weapon who could play either running back or wide receiver for the Buckeyes.

Christian Bryant continues the Cleveland Glenville pipeline into OSU. The 5-10 cornerback brings a tremendous football IQ and great leadership skills to Columbus. Ohio State signed top-five classes in 2008 and 2009. Expect the Buckeyes to bounce back big on the recruiting trail in 2011.

BOWL PROJECTION

ORANGE BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING LANCE KENDRICKS, TE

Kendricks had a solid season in 2009 and should take a big step forward as a prime target for quarterback Scott Tolzien.

After a 2008 campaign that wasn't awe-inspiring, some were wondering whether Bret Bielema's early success had been a result of former coach Barry Alvarez's groundwork rather than Bielema's acumen. He answered those questions last year with a 10-win season and a bowl victory that has the Badgers among the top teams in the Big Ten this season.

A manageable nonconference schedule plus the absence of Penn State on the league slate means Wisconsin can focus on its back-to-back games against Ohio State and Iowa (in Iowa City) in October. Win those—or even split them—and the Badgers could be in Pasadena. Last year, Wisconsin began its campaign at 5-0, hoping for a good outcome against the Buckeyes and Hawkeyes, but lost both games by a combined 28 points and was not a factor in the conference from then on.

The key to the season will be replacing five starters on defense, because the Badger attack will be full of firepower, with 10 regulars returning. Wisconsin was one of just six teams in the country to average more than 200 yards per game on the ground and through the air, and could do that again in 2010.

It all begins with junior running back John Clay, who was last year's Big Ten Offensive Player of the Year.

Clay banged his way to 1,517 yards and scored 18 times. Everybody knows the Badgers want to run the football, and with Clay around, they are dangerous doing so. The presence of sophomore Montee Ball, who gained 391 yards rushing in his debut campaign, and senior Zach Brown (279) give Bielema plenty of insurance, should Clay need time off.

The ground attack will be even more dangerous, thanks to the return of all five offensive line starters, most notably tackle Gabe Carimi and guard John Moffitt, who can also play center. Although sophomore center Peter Konz, guard Kevin Zeitler and junior tackle Josh Oglesby aren't as decorated as their first-team All-Big Ten counterparts, they saw plenty of time last year and were part of a line that not only opened big holes for Clay but protected senior quarterback Scott Tolzien.

As for Tolzien, talk about your surprises. Many expected him to be the Badger backup, but he ended up starting the whole year and leading the Big Ten in passing efficiency. And it wasn't because Wisconsin was throwing short passes. Tolzien completed 64.3 percent of his throws and amassed 2,705 yards through the air. Expect him to be even more accurate this season and to cut down on his interceptions (11).

Tolzien will miss tight end Garrett Graham, who caught 51 balls last year, but he does have junior Nick Toon (54 receptions) and senior Isaac Anderson (30) at his disposal. Expect senior Lance Kendricks (29) to move into Graham's spot at tight end and be productive.

The big question on the Badger defense is along the front four, where three starters have left. End J.J. Watt had a good 2009 campaign, registering 15.5 tackles for loss and 4.5 sacks. But the loss of end O'Brien Schofield will hurt. It may take all three of the candidates for Schofield's job to replace him, because junior Louis Nzegwu and sophomores David Gilbert and Brendan Kelly aren't in his league. Inside, junior Patrick Butrym was a regular last year.

Leading tackler Jaevary McFadden is gone from the linebacker rotation, leaving a hole on the outside. Expect senior Culmer St. Jean (63 tackles) to return to the middle, while sophomores Mike Taylor and Chris Borland flank him. Each missed spring ball while rehabbing injuries, but they should be fine once the season starts.

Although three starters return in the secondary, the Badgers must do a better job of keeping enemy pass catchers out of the end zone. Rival quarterbacks completed 21 touchdown passes last year. The return of corners Devin Smith, Niles Brinkley and Antonio Fenelus, all of whom have experience, should tighten things up. Senior safety Jay Valai is a stalwart on the back line, but junior Aaron Henry has to step up at the free position.

RECRUITING REPORT

The Badgers failed to sign a four-star prospect for the first time since Rivals.com began its recruiting rankings with the 2002 class. In fact, from 2002-09, the Badgers have only signed an average of 2.75 four-star prospects. Despite signing 24 prospects in 2010, the lack of any four-star recruits placed them near the bottom of the Big Ten recruiting rankings.

Wisconsin, though, is proof you don't have to trade punches with Ohio State and other juggernauts on the recruiting trail to win on the football field. The Badgers have made eight straight bowl appearances, including four consecutive New Year's Day games from 2004-07.

There are potential stars in this class. Running back James C. White and defensive back Peniel Jean are two major steals from Florida.

The Badgers took care of business in Wisconsin, signing seven of the state's top 11 prospects. Michael Trotter is one of the best tackling safeties in the Midwest. His twin brother, Marcus, is a grayshirt signee for the Badgers and an absolute steal. Tight end Marquis Mason is an elite—but raw—athlete with NFL potential.

The middle of the defense will be stout in years to come with Beau Allen (6-2, 300 pounds) and Bryce Gilbert (6-2, 285).

BOWL PROJECTION

CAPITAL ONE BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING TROY JOHNSON, LB

Johnson started one game last year and was named conference Defensive Player of the Week. He'll take over for the departed Pat Angerer in 2010.

For the first nine weeks of the 2009 season, Iowa's football team was an 85-man lucky charm. No matter what happened, the Hawkeyes couldn't avoid good luck. So what if Northern Iowa recovers the ball after Iowa blocks a field goal in the opener? Just block it again. Fall behind at home against Michigan? Stage a big second-half rally. Need some late magic versus Michigan State? How about a last-second touchdown pass? Indiana gets out to a big halftime lead? Pile it on after intermission.

By the time November dawned, the team had produced so much magic, Hawkeye fans thought they were supporting Hogwarts, not Iowa. While wizardry can help teams come from behind, it can't protect body parts. When Ricky Stanzi's ankle was shredded by angry Northwestern defenders, the Hawkeyes hoped it wouldn't break the spell. Alas, it did. Iowa lost to the Wildcats and fell to Ohio State in overtime, losing its chance for a perfect season and Big Ten title.

Stanzi is back, and that's a great place to start. But he has some work to do. The quarterback completed just 56.3 percent of his throws last year and tossed 15 interceptions. If the Hawkeyes are going to mount a serious challenge to Ohio State and hold off Wisconsin and Penn State, Stanzi must be more accurate and cut down on the picks to keep the team from falling into big early holes. Sophomore James Vandenberg, who stood in admirably for Stanzi when he was hurt, isn't yet ready to be a starter (48.3-percent accuracy, 2 TDs, 5 INTs).

Stanzi has the luxury of returning his top two targets in Derrell Johnson-Koulianos (45 catches, 16.7-yard average) and Marvin McNutt (34, 19.8). Depth should come from Colin Sandeman and Keenan Davis.

The Iowa ground game, which has always been a key part of the Kirk Ferentz attack, should be better than it was last year. The biggest reason is the healthy return of sophomore Jewel Hampton, who tore his ACL last August. Last year, Adam Robinson moved into Hampton's spot and acquitted himself well, gaining 834 yards and scoring five times. Sophomore Brandon Wegher (641 yards, 8 TDs) had a strong first year and brings grit to the backfield. Put it together, and the Hawks have a tremendous ground attack—provided the offensive line comes around.

The losses of tackle Bryan Bulaga, honorable mention All-Big Ten tackle Kyle Calloway and Rafael Eubanks means some serious rebuilding is going on up front. Senior guard Julian Vandervelde is a stalwart, and the center spot is a toss up between Josh Koeppel and James Ferentz. Riley Reiff had a great first season and should contend for all-conference honors down the road. Junior Adam Gettis is the favorite entering fall to win the other guard spot.

If the Hawkeye offensive front wants to see how it stands, it should line up against the defensive line, which is ready to build on a solid 2009 campaign. Leading the way is senior end Adrian Clayborn (11.5 sacks, 20 tackles), who is one of the best in the nation at his position. Opposite Clayborn is Broderick Binns, who registered six sacks last year in his first season as a starter. Inside, Karl Klug is quick, and senior Christian Ballard is tough to move.

They'll have to be particularly stout, because the linebackers behind them aren't that experienced. The loss of middle man Pat Angerer will sting. Senior weakside linebacker Jeremiha Hunter was second on the team in tackles last year (89). Senior Troy Johnson, who made 20 tackles last season in a backup role, will likely step in for Angerer, while junior Tyler Nielsen is the top choice to replace A.J. Edds, who was a second-team All-Big Ten choice a year ago.

Had Amari Spivey not declared early for the NFL draft, the Hawkeye secondary would have been one of the best in the nation. Even without him, it will still be talented and experienced. Still, it will be hard to follow last year's performance, when the Hawks limited opposing passers to a 49.6 completion percentage, picked off 21 passes and allowed only nine scores through the air.

Safeties Tyler Sash (6 INTs) and Brett Greenwood (3) and cornerbacks Shaun Prater and Micah Hyde will see plenty of action in 2010.

RECRUITING REPORT

The Hawkeyes signed 21 players, including a quartet of four-star prospects from different states. A.J. Derby is the top-ranked in-state prospect. A star quarterback for Iowa City High School, Derby could also play safety, linebacker or receiver at the college level. Ohio offensive lineman Andrew Donnal and Illinois tight end C.J. Fiedorowicz were U.S. Army All-Americans. Running back Marcus Coker, from Maryland, is a good fit for the Big Ten with his combination of power and speed.

The incoming linebacker corps is a major strength of this class. Austin Gray, James Morris and Jim Poggi form a very strong trio. Derby and Christian Kirksey, another versatile athlete, could make the linebacker haul even stronger.

Iowa went out of state for three outstanding defensive tackles. Carl Davis (Sterling Heights, Mich.) is 6-5 and 300 pounds, and he could be a monster at defensive tackle or offensive guard. Anthony Ferguson (Baltimore) and Donavan Johnson (Arlington, Texas) will add size and athleticism to the middle of the Hawkeyes' defense.

4 PENN STATE NITTANY LIONS

EVAN ROYSER, RB

It was the end of an era in Happy Valley this offseason when Penn State coach Joe Paterno jettisoned the old-fashioned black glasses for newfangled frames that made him look younger and un-Paterno like. In the grand scheme, it wasn't a big deal, but it sure will make the coach appear different on the sidelines this season.

That won't be the only new look for the Nittany Lions in 2010. Those accustomed to seeing stalwarts such as Darryl Clark, Navorro Bowman and Jeremy Boone must get to know a lot of new players. And it will be interesting to see if Penn State can hold on to its Big Ten status with a new quarterback, a rebuilt offensive line and a fresh trio of starting linebackers. Paterno's latest revival, which featured a trip to Pasadena and three 11-win seasons in the past five years, could hit a bump. But last year's team had to replace 13 starters and had some areas of worry, and it fared OK.

The difference between 2009 and this season is that Clark is gone under center, and the Lions will likely go with untested Kevin Newsome to run the Spread HD attack that has become so dangerous. Newsome takes over having thrown just 11 passes (8 completions) during his freshman debut. He has good size and is mobile, but it's tough to push for a conference title with a green quarterback.

BULLET POINTS

- ➔ Kevin Newsome is the expected starter at QB, but don't be shocked if the Lions turn to a freshman to replace Darryl Clark.
- ➔ Losing three starters at linebacker would hurt some schools, but Penn State has options.
- ➔ The new QB will benefit from RB Evan Royster and a deep crop of wideouts.

THE NEXT BIG THING KEVIN NEWSOME, QB

Big and mobile, Newsome only lacks experience to become an elite spread triggerman.

If Newsome doesn't start, the position will be even younger, since Paterno could turn the attack over to freshmen Paul Jones or Robert Bolden. That would be a surprise, especially since Penn State visits Alabama in its second game.

Newsome will be surrounded by a lot of talent, beginning with senior running back Evan Royster, who passed up the NFL draft after gaining 1,169 yards and averaging 5.7 yards per carry last year. Royster is a durable back who can handle 20 to 25 carries a game, which is good news if Newsome has trouble in the air.

The return of junior Stephfon Green (319 rushing yards) is more good news, because he can hit home runs. True freshman Silas Redd, who enrolled early, could also see time.

The receiving situation is excellent, as Derek Moya (48 catches), Graham Zug (46) and Chaz Powell (28) are all back. Sophomore Curtis Drake has big-play potential on the outside, and freshman Alex Kenney is a highly regarded newcomer. There is, however, reason for concern at tight end, where Andrew Quarless and Mickey Schuler have graduated. The likely incumbent is junior Andrew Szczerba, but he caught just one pass last year.

The line loses standouts in tackles Dennis Landolt and Ako Poti. But center Stefen Wisniewski has proven himself to be a strong pivot, while guards Lou Eliades, DeOn'tae Pannell and Johnnie Troutman played well last season. Pannell could find his way to Landolt's left tackle spot, but sophomore Mike Farrell and junior Chimaeeze Okoli were holding down the tackle spots at the end of spring.

Since Penn State is known as "Linebacker U.," many people think Paterno and defensive coordinator Tom Bradley just roll out a new star every time somebody moves on. Well, it's unlikely the warehouse has an easy replacement for Bowman, who left a year early for the NFL draft. He made 17 tackles for loss last year and was a big-play man all season.

If sophomore Michael Mauti rebounds from a torn ACL suffered last August, he'll supplant senior Chris Colasanti in the middle. Expect senior Bani Gbadyu and junior Nathan Stupar to take over the outside spots, giving the Lions a few solid replacements for last year's leaders.

Up front, the loss of tackle Jared Odrick (7 sacks) will be huge. He was a terror in the middle and will be tough to replace. Senior Ollie Ogbu made eight tackles for loss from the tackle spot, while junior Jack Crawford had 14.5 tackles for loss and 5.5 sacks. Sophomores Jordan Hill and James Terry are the leading candidates for Odrick's job.

The safety job is strong this year thanks to the return of juniors Drew Astorino and Nick Sukay. D'Anton Lynn proved to be effective at one corner, but the Lions have to find a replacement for A.J. Wallace on the other side. It could be Stephon Morris or Derrick Thomas.

RECRUITING REPORT

Coach Joe Paterno can still recruit with the best of them. Penn State is bringing in the Big Ten's top-ranked recruiting class and the No. 12 class in the country.

The Nittany Lions did it by hitting the Atlantic East with great success. Running back Silas Redd and linebacker Khairi Fortt are both Rivals 100 prospects from Connecticut. Maryland product Zach Zwinak was the nation's second-best fullback and could also be a standout at linebacker. Tight end Kyle Baublitz and defensive end Dakota Royer are two of the best from eastern Pennsylvania.

More important, however, Penn State reclaimed turf in western Pennsylvania. Ohio State, Pittsburgh and Notre Dame have had success in the Pittsburgh area in recent years, but the Nittany Lions fought back in this class by landing a trio of four-star prospects from that half of the state who are all future stars: offensive tackle Thomas Ricketts, center Miles Dieffenbach and quarterback Paul Jones.

Jones will be joined in the quarterback group by another four-star passer, Robert Bolden. The 6-4 dual-threat QB from the Detroit area was the No. 3 prospect in Michigan. Penn State also signed defensive end C.J. Olaniran out of Detroit, another four-star recruit and the No. 6 overall prospect in Michigan.

5 PURDUE BOILERMAKERS

It may not be fair to put all of the Boilermakers' hopes on one player, but the arrival of Miami transfer Robert Marve has Purdue fans expecting a more potent offense than last year's attack, which wasn't too shabby. Marve, who looked strong during spring practice, will help squire a young Purdue team into what it hopes will be a bright future. If the Boilers can get sharper on defense, particularly against the run, and cut back on their 29 turnovers (including 15 lost fumbles), they should be able to challenge for a bowl berth.

Marve tore his ACL last year after transferring from Miami. The time off might have given him some time to think about his future, which needs to be improved from his past. At Miami, Marve struggled in the classroom and with several discipline problems. He has the talent but lacks focus. It appears he has found it, though the big-armed, mobile junior could lose the job to sophomore Caleb TerBush, who also looked strong in spring play.

The return of Keith Smith, who caught 91 passes and scored six times last year, will help either quarterback. He'll team with tight end Kyle Adams and wideouts Keith Carlos, Gary Bush and Cortez Smith in a strong rotation.

It wasn't the best spring to be a Purdue running back. Last year's standout, Ralph Bolden (935 rushing yards) tore his ACL on March 31. Al-Terek McBurse suffered a hairline fracture in his arm, and senior Dan Dierking nursed a hyperextended knee. McBurse and Dierking will be ready by the fall, and McBurse needs to realize the potential he showed on special teams last year.

Guard Ken Plue and tackle Dennis Kelly return to anchor a line that now has some holes.

There are huge problems in the secondary, where all four starters are gone. The Boilermakers hope junior college newcomer Michael Eargle will help immediately at corner, while sophomore Josh Johnson showed promise there last year. Junior Albert Evans is a favorite at one safety spot.

The linebacking corps is solid, albeit changed. Sophomore Dwayne Beckford has moved into the middle, pushing Chris Carlino to the strong side, while Joe Holland is back to play the weak role. They'll work behind a line that includes stand-out end Ryan Kerrigan, who had 13 sacks and 18.5 tackles for loss last year. On the other side, junior Gerald Gooden has plenty of potential, while returning tackle Kawann Short had an impressive debut.

THE NEXT BIG THING ROBERT MARVE, QB

The Miami transfer will be given the keys to Purdue's attack and is expected to behave and produce.

Kicker Carson Wiggs made 14 field goals last year but hit just eight of 14 attempts from longer than 40 yards. He could also wind up with the punting job.

6 NORTHWESTERN WILDCATS

It's hard to believe—given the decades of futility suffered by Wildcat coaches, players and fans—that Northwestern stands on the threshold of becoming a perennial bowl team and consistent winner. Under coach and alumnus Pat Fitzgerald, the Purple are on a roll, winning 27 games and playing in a couple postseason contests.

After years of hit-or-miss success, it's not unrealistic for Northwestern fans to have expectations regarding this season. Even though NU must replace quarterback Mike Kafka, his two top receivers and three defensive backfield starters, there is enough talent returning and in the pipeline to secure another bowl appearance and make a run at a first-division Big Ten finish.

Replacing Kafka is the main concern on offense, but Fitzgerald is confident junior Dan Persa, who completed 20 passes in 2009, will move into the starting position. Persa is mobile and accurate, which is what the Wildcat offense needs.

It also requires help at running back. Although a bevy of backs return, none stood out in 2009, and the Cats managed just 117.5 yards per game on the ground. Junior Scott Concannon and sophomore Arby Fields had the bulk of the carries last year, and the return from injury of Alex Daniel (ankle) should help, too. Look out for redshirt freshman Mike Trumpy and heralded recruit Adonis Smith, who shows up this summer.

They'll operate behind a line that returns five starters led by junior tackle Al Netter, a third-year starter, center Ben Burkett and left guard Keegan Grant. But no such depth exists at receiver, where senior Sidney Stewart (42 catches) and junior "superback" Drake Dunsmore (47) return. The task will be replacing Andrew Brewer (16.2 yard-per-catch average, 9 TDs).

The Wildcats' front seven has plenty of talent, most notably tackle Corbin Bryant (2.5 sacks) and end Vince Browne (5 sacks). Top tackler Quentin Davie is a fixture at one outside linebacker position, while fellow senior Nate Williams is stout in the middle. Junior Ben Johnson could inherit the other outside spot.

Since opposing quarterbacks completed 59.2 percent of their passes last year against Northwestern, the Wildcats need to tighten up in the defensive backfield. Junior corner Jordan Mabin and junior safety Brian Peters are the returning stalwarts. But the Wildcats will miss first-team all-league safety Brad Phillips and Sherrick McManis (5 INTs). Fitzgerald hopes junior David Arnold, a converted linebacker, can help at safety, while Demetrius Dugar and Jeravin Matthews will slug it out at the other corner, with Justan Vaughn backing the corps.

Senior Stefan Demos, who made 18 of 25 field goal tries last year, may give up his dual role as the team's kicker and punter. He'll face some competition from Jeff Budzien and Brandon Williams for the punting job.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

When Mark Dantonio took over at Michigan State in 2007, everybody expected an end to the bone-headed mistakes on the field and the poor off-field behavior that characterized previous administrations. Then came the 2009 season and the November brawl that preceded the Spartans' bowl loss to Texas Tech.

Michigan State enters this year in need of upgrades on and off the field. Dantonio is ready to move forward, having suspended the perpetrators and even said goodbye to a couple. But the focus is now on football, and the Spartans have to get better, especially on defense, where Pat Narduzzi's unit was generous last year.

At least State can rely on senior linebacker Greg Jones, who returns for his final season to make a run at the Big Ten's Defensive Player of the Year honor. Jones is a stalwart who can do everything, and it will be interesting to watch him in the 3-4 this year, which will be featured more often, thanks to State's surfeit of linebackers. Joining Jones on the second line are senior Eric Gordon and sophomore Chris Norman. It will be interesting to see what Narduzzi does with 6-7 freshman William Gholston, who could play end or outside linebacker. Up front, the Spartans have some talent in sophomore tackle Jerel Worthy and end Colin Neely. The safety tandem of senior Marcus Hyde and junior Trenton Robinson is proven and productive, and corner Chris L. Rucker is a senior with potential, provided he can steer clear of trouble after his role in the fight. Whoever plays in the defensive backfield must make more plays on the ball, as Michigan State picked off just six passes last year.

By fall, the MSU offense should be in good shape. For now, it's in flux, partly because receivers Mark Dell and B.J. Cunningham are working their way back through the depth chart after the November slugfest. They'll be joined by former quarterback Keith Nichol, who showed promise during the Alamo Bowl. Tight ends Charlie Gantt and Brian Linthicum block well and can get downfield.

Nichol's move gives junior Kirk Cousins security under center. He had a strong debut, completing 60.4 percent of his passes. Now, he must become more consistent in getting the ball downfield. A pair of talented sophomore backs, Larry Caper and Edwin Baker, will help Nichols move the chains. Caper is a banger, while Baker can get loose in the open field. Both need to be more reliable, or they risk losing time to newcomer Nick Hill, who is also good in the return game.

Junior guard Joel Foreman leads the rebuilt line, which returns only two starters from a unit that performed well last year.

Senior Aaron Bates is a reliable punter, but kicking duties are up for grabs, as he wasn't stellar there last year.

THE NEXT BIG THING

WILLIAM GHOLSTON, LB/DE

The freshman might be eased into the defensive rotation this year, but he has the potential to be a dynamic pass rusher.

Cullen Christian CB, 6-0, 180 He was one of the nation's best cornerbacks and is big enough to play safety, too. He will help an ailing pass defense right away.	Devin Gardner QB, 6-4, 195 Gardner is the perfect fit for Michigan's offensive system. He has a live arm, good wheels and oozes leadership skills.	Demar Dorsey S, 6-1, 175 Dorsey is a fast defensive back who not only has outstanding coverage ability but also provides support against the run.	Ken Wilkins DE, 6-3, 244 Wilkins has the strength to play defensive end and the speed to play linebacker. Regardless, he'll help the defense at any position.	Marvin Robinson OLB, 6-1, 190 He could be a speedy and hard-hitting strong safety or bring a lot of athleticism to Michigan's linebacker group.

If there is a coach under more fire than Rich Rodriguez, he had better have a hook-and-ladder truck on call, because the Wolverines' boss enters his third year in Ann Arbor with a win-or-else mandate.

Michigan posted its worst Big Ten finish in 47 years last season, and only a controversial win over Indiana prevented the Wolverines from posting zero wins in conference play. The Wolverines offense was inconsistent under the leadership of freshman quarterback Tate Forcier, while the defense was more philanthropic than Bill Gates.

As the 2010 season dawns, Rodriguez is convinced his Wolverines have the talent—much of it young—to take significant strides forward. The question is what threshold the restless Wolverine fan base has for continued pain. Another empty postseason will be intolerable, but it's tough to say whether a six-win campaign and Alamo Bowl invitation will prevent the townsfolk from storming the football office carrying torches and pitchforks.

At least the quarterback situation is clear—sort of. Forcier had some awful moments last season, like that four-interception debacle against Ohio State. But he engineered the comeback win over Notre Dame and pulled his team into overtime at Michigan State, even though the Spartans won. He has to worry about fellow sophomore Denard Robinson, who would be dangerous if he could pass consistently. Incoming freshman Devin Gardner could push for time as well.

The Wolverine skill group is a mixed bag. Receivers Roy Roundtree and Martavious Odoms have big-play potential, but the backfield is thin on experience. Junior Michael Shaw and sophomore Vincent Smith have speed but not much time on their résumés. At least they'll be working behind a solid line, as three full-time and two part-time starters return to a deep unit.

Depth does not describe the Wolverines' defense. There aren't many proven playmakers around, either. Gone is end Brandon Graham, a tackle-for-loss machine, and corner Donovan Warren, who led the team with four picks last season.

End Mike Martin and nose tackle Ryan Van Bergen will hold down the front, with help from sophomore William Campbell, but there is no one close to Graham's level. Senior Obi Eze had a good offseason and should reclaim the starting line-backer job he lost to Kevin Leach late last year. Jonas Mouton is expected to make big contributions at linebacker, while sophomore Craig Roh had a strong debut and will be a force off the edge.

The defensive backfield boasts numbers but little proven talent. Corner Troy Woolfolk and safety Brandin Hawthorne have potential, but safety Jordan Kovacs needs to give up fewer big plays.

THE NEXT BIG THING CRAIG ROH, LB

The sophomore can get off the edge and find the passer, and he has the speed to track down ballcarriers across the field.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

So, what do you do when the wolf is at the door, and the faithful are starting to realize what the folks at your old job knew and the main thing saving you from the bread line is a fat buyout?

You fire your assistants, of course.

That's what happened in Champaign after last year's awful 3-9 campaign. Now head coach Ron Zook moves into his sixth season at Illinois at a crossroads. If things don't improve, it could be time to move on. Zook hopes the addition of new offensive coordinator Paul Petrino (and two other offensive coaches) will jump-start an attack that floundered last year, despite veteran quarterback Juice Williams and big-play receiver Arrelious Benn.

First, Zook must find a quarterback from among three candidates. The only one who saw time last season was sophomore Jacob Charest, who completed 50 percent of his 56 attempts in 2009 and is a pocket passer. Redshirt freshman Nathan Scheelhaase is a spread-option quarterback, while true freshman Chandler Whitmer is a precise thrower. The winner has the honor of opening the season against Missouri.

Junior Mikel Leshoure had three 100-yard games at the end of 2009 and has breakaway potential. Jason Ford is another good ground weapon. The Illini were hoping sophomore Justin Green could add even more pop to the rushing attack, but he broke his ankle during a spring scrimmage, and his future is in question.

The move of QB Eddie McGee to wideout should bolster a receiving corps that lacks depth. Up front, the loss of Jon Asamoah hurts, but tackle Hugh Thornton is promising and Jeff Allen and Ryan Palmer are experienced holdovers.

New coordinator Vic Koenning brings his attacking eight-man front to Champaign and will try to avert his eyes from last year's final two games, when Illinois surrendered 102 points. The return of linebacker Martez Wilson from a neck injury will help. Trulon Henry, a junior college hitter, will fortify the defensive backfield.

Up front, senior Clay Nurse had a team-high 10.5 tackles for loss last year, while tackle Corey Liuget had eight. If tackle Josh Brent gets his academic act together at Parkland College and is eligible in the fall, he'll help against the run. Ian Thomas had to play in the middle last year in Wilson's stead, but he'll be back outside this season, where he is better suited. Expect junior Russell Ellington to provide depth.

Junior Tavon Wilson and sophomore Terry Hawthorne have promise at corner.

Junior Derek Dimke made all five of his field goal tries a year ago and showed a strong leg, while senior Anthony Santella was a reliable punter.

THE NEXT BIG THING MIKEL LESHORE, RB

Leshoure closed last year with a trio of 100-yard games and looks to become a much-needed meal ticket in the backfield this season.

10 MINNESOTA GOLDEN GOPHERS

PHERS • GOLDEN GOPHERS • GOLDEN BO

The Gophers look at 2009 as a series of near misses, from late-game stumbles to that Insight Bowl mess against Iowa State. Even though coach Tim Brewster has followed his 1-11 debut with 7-6 and 6-7 records, respectively, there is still some restlessness in Minneapolis, where a new stadium and moderate success are good starts but not enough to engender confidence. It didn't help that the offense's best weapon, wideout Eric Decker, suffered a broken foot in the eighth game of the season. Without Decker, the Gopher attack stagnated.

Brewster's challenge this year will be on defense, where nine starters are gone after progress was made last season. Not that there aren't questions on offense. They begin at quarterback, where both of last year's signal-callers return. Last season was supposed to be a huge one for Adam Weber, but the junior took a step back, completing just 52 percent of his throws with 15 interceptions and only 13 touchdowns. There was talk during spring about sophomore MarQueis Gray being primed to take over under center. But a strong performance by Weber reestablished him as the Gophers quarterback.

With Gray backing Weber at QB, the receiver spots will be left to juniors Troy Stoudemire (26 catches, 2 TDs) and Da'Jon McKnight (17, 0). The Gophers were counting on sophomore Bryant Allen to help, but he broke his ankle during spring drills. He should be ready for summer camp, though. Junior Brandon Green (21, 1) will also be counted on.

The running back situation is steady, but that's not great news, since neither junior Duane Bennett nor sophomore Kevin Whaley were impressive in 2009. Both showed flashes of talent but little consistency and could see their time cut when freshman Devon Wright arrives this fall. It doesn't help that Bennett and Whaley toiled behind a shaky offensive line last year. While all five starters are back, the senior-laden unit must improve.

With so many starters gone on defense, at least the Gophers could count on returning safeties Kim Royston and Kyle Theret, or so they thought. Theret was suspended for drunk driving, and Royston broke his ankle during the spring. Both are expected back this fall, but so much for the safety net.

The front seven remains a mystery, mostly. Junior linebackers Keanon Cooper and Gary Tinsley have proven themselves capable of making plays, while classmate Brandon Kirksey was able to get into opposing backfields at tackle last year.

Ryan Collado moved to corner from safety and has plenty of experience, while Michael Carter has good skills and speed on the outside. If Theret and Royston can't go, look for junior college transfer Christyn Lewis and Kenny Watkins to get a shot, along with juco import Herschel Thornton.

THE NEXT BIG THING MICHAEL CARTER, CB

The Gophers need lots of help on defense, and the sophomore has the speed and skills to help fortify Minnesota against the pass.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

There are two ways to look at the Hoosiers entering the 2010 season. The first is to consider the 2009 woes—a weak ground attack, rotten third-down defense and a generous secondary—and conclude that trouble will continue in Bloomington again this year. The second is to focus on the near misses against Michigan, Wisconsin and Northwestern and figure the team was a touchdown away from a 7-5 record.

Coach Bill Lynch is taking the second route. Not that he has a choice, since the fourth-year coach has a 14-23 record at Indiana and needs prosperity to protect his position. So he'll focus on the eight returning offensive starters and a defense that mixes up 4-3 and 3-4 looks in an attempt to be more effective late in games.

The offense should be good, provided the Hoosiers can shore up the line and improve the running game. The returns of center Will Matte, right tackle James Brewer and left guard Justin Pagan are a good start, but senior Cody Faulkner and junior Andrew McDonald must step up quickly, or Indiana will again be pass-heavy.

If the line is solid, sophomore Darius Willis (607 yards, 6 TDs) will thrive, assuming he stays healthy. Senior Trea Burgess is a line smasher, and true freshman Antonio Banks could help.

If the Hoosiers have to throw, that's no problem, since senior Ben Chappell returns after a strong 2009. Chappell completed 62.6 percent of his throws for 2,941 yards, 17 scores and 15 interceptions. This season, he'll try to increase his accuracy and scoring strikes. That might not be easy, since the Hoosiers lack a deep threat. Tandon Doss (77 catches, 5 TDs) and Damarlo Belcher (61, 5) are productive, but neither got deep too often last year. Senior Terrance Turner is a solid possession type, while redshirt freshmen Duwyce Wilson and Jamonne Chester have the speed to make a difference.

The Hoosiers are thin through the back seven, where only two starters return: middle linebacker Tyler Replogle (80 tackles) and corner Donnell Jones. That's the reason the Hoosiers shifted three players from offense to the defensive backfield and brought in junior college linebacker Jeff Thomas and cornerback Lenyatta Kiles. Indiana hopes Mitchell Evans, who has moved from safety to running back to safety again, can handle the duties, and Matt Ernest, who pitched for the Hoosier nine this spring, could make a difference at corner.

Up front, tackles Larry Black and Adam Replogle can stuff the middle and get into opposing backfields. But there is a need at end since Greg Middleton and Jammie Kirlaw have left. Darius Johnson has one job, while Deonte Mack will fight off Fred Jones and Eric Thomas on the other side.

THE NEXT BIG THING

JEFF THOMAS, LB

The junior college import arrived on campus for spring drills and brought a much-needed intensity to a defense that must get more consistent.

Last year's Big 12 title game portends a new defensive style

By Blair Kerkhoff, Kansas City Star

The offensive freak shows that largely defined and entertained the Big 12 may be a thing of the past.

Players who posted the eye-popping numbers—and the coaches who scripted the plays—have moved along.

Eras have closed for record-breaking quarterbacks such as Colt McCoy, Sam Bradford, Zac Robinson and Todd Reesing.

The guru of the modern spread offense, Mike Leach, was bounced from Texas Tech.

Defense is looking like the new theme, and no game better demonstrated the philosophical shift than last year's Big 12 championship encounter when Texas outlasted Nebraska 13-12 in a contest that featured one touchdown, 10 sacks (nine by the Cornhuskers), 17 punts and 308 combined total yards.

Mostly, the Big 12 trend seems to be about balance. Defense and offense. Running and passing.

Some of the top returning players on the offensive side are running backs, including Kansas State's Daniel Thomas and Oklahoma State's Kendall Hunter. Last year's second-team all-conference quarterback, Texas A&M's Jerrod Johnson, is the league's best dual threat.

On defense, teams that lost the highest-profile linemen—Nebraska with Ndamukong Suh and Oklahoma with Gerald McCoy—remain strong up front with Jared Crick and Jeremy Beal, respectively. The Sooners may also have the league's top overall defender in linebacker Travis Lewis. And there appears to be no shortage of good defensive backs this year.

RECRUITING ROUNDUP

By Jeremy Crabtree, Rivals.com

- TEXAS It was another fantastic class by Mack Brown, who seemingly gets any player he wants out of Texas—the state with the most talent. A few positions that are particularly strong in this class are wide receiver, defensive line and linebacker.
- OKLAHOMA The Sooners landed a prototypical big quarterback, two explosive running backs, a game-breaking wide receiver and a ton of help on both sides of the line.
- TEXAS A&M With commitments from four of the top six offensive linemen in Texas, the Aggies have a great foundation for their offense.
- MISSOURI Two talented quarterbacks—James Franklin and Tyler Gabbert—highlight this class.
- NEBRASKA Nebraska recruited a nice mix of athleticism and physicality. The physicality comes from massive junior college offensive tackle Jermarcus Hardrick. Athletically, the class is highlighted by running back Braylon Heard.
- OKLAHOMA STATE Two similarly athletic and productive quarterbacks in Johnny Deaton and Nathan Sorenson lead the list of signees. Justin Gilbert, who played quarterback in high school, may be the most explosive athlete in the class and one of the more exciting players entering the Big 12.
- BAYLOR There was a time when Baylor's presence near the middle of the pack in the Big 12 would be considered a huge accomplishment. But under Art Briles, it has become expected.
- TEXAS TECH There were some clear obstacles the Red Raiders had to overcome after a sudden coaching change, but Tommy Tuberville responded nicely to the challenge and landed a solid class.
- KANSAS The Jayhawks closed strong by luring four-star running back Brandon Bourbon away from Stanford.
- IOWA STATE In Paul Rhoads' first full year to recruit, he signed a full class of 28 prospects that was heavy on the offensive line and at the skill positions.
- KANSAS STATE The formula that has worked for Bill Snyder in the past—a heavy dose of junior college prospects—is back in full force.
- COLORADO A mediocre season on the field and coaching uncertainty impacted Colorado's class, but there were some strong pickups on the defensive side of the ball.

ASCENDING

OKLAHOMA Uh-oh. Oklahoma has all that talent plus a chip on its shoulder after last year's injury-plagued 8-5 record. The Sooners never got started after the Sam Bradford injury and have the talent to make big gains this season.

DESCENDING

OKLAHOMA STATE We have concerns for Oklahoma State's Cowboys. Nine who started on defense last season are gone, and so is the three-year starter at quarterback, Zac Robinson.

FOUR FEARLESS FORECASTS

- Mack Brown will step down after this season, and coach-in-waiting Will Muschamp will take over for 2011.
- Kansas State running back Daniel Thomas will be the league's top Heisman Trophy candidate.
- Texas A&M and Colorado will improve enough to extend the tenures of Mike Sherman and Dan Hawkins.
- Texas Tech will not lead the nation in passing for only the third time in the last nine years.

BOWL PROJECTION

COTTON BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING JERMARCUS HARDRICK, OT

"Yoshi" Hardrick is described by offensive coordinator Shawn Watson as a player with a "hot motor." At 6-7 and 320 pounds, this motor is definitely a semi. Hardwick, a transfer from Fort Scott (Kan.) CC, was the talk of spring ball.

The program's best player in a decade is gone, but optimism abounds.

Shouldn't compute, right? But that's the case at Nebraska, which bid farewell to one of the best to wear the uniform in tackle Ndamukong Suh and a few other defensive standouts.

Coach Bo Pelini was well aware of the Cornhuskers' 2010 roster when he declared minutes after the Holiday Bowl skunking of Arizona, "Nebraska's back, and we're here to stay."

Pelini wasn't merely playing to an audience. He truly believes the tide is turning for a program that, after standing as one of the game's dominant for the final third of the previous century, was left behind in the first decade of the next.

Consider that the Huskers won five national championships between 1970 and 1997 and did not win as much as a conference title after 1999.

Had Texas not squeezed in a final-play field goal to win the Big 12 title game, Nebraska would have owned its most significant triumph of the decade.

So the Cornhuskers are feeling relevant again, and it gives Pelini a newfound bounce in his step.

"I really like our team," Pelini says. "Forget about the talent and expectations and all that other stuff, I like the way they go about their business. I like the way they work. I like their attitude and leadership. I like the type of football players we have on this team and the way they've come together."

But it may not be completely together as Nebraska heads into fall camp. Quarterback Zac Lee, who started most of last season, underwent surgery on his right (throwing) arm and missed spring drills.

Lee had his ups and downs last season, finishing with a solid performance against Arizona. The offense finished 99th nationally in total yards and 75th in scoring. Folks remember Suh and the defense's monster Big 12 title game effort against Texas. What many forget is that the Cornhuskers' offense collected a mere 106 yards in that game.

Cody Green, who got a long look and even a couple of starts last year, and Taylor Martinez are more athletic quarterbacks than Lee. The question is, can either operate the offense as effectively as him?

A hint may have come in the Holiday Bowl. Nebraska ran zone read in that game, the same scheme Green used in high school. Pelini says nobody loses a job because of injury, or in Lee's case, surgery. But he insists that every position is open when fall begins.

Regardless of who Nebraska names as quarterback, you'll probably see the Huskers joining the growing legion of teams using the Wildcat formation. Running back Rex Burkhead had big gains taking snaps in the Holiday Bowl, and that may be the best way to use Martinez, who is the fastest of the quarterback candidates.

Burkhead was having a fine freshman season when he missed five games with a broken foot. He'll get plenty of opportunity this season along with senior Roy Helu, the Big 12's fourth-leading rusher last year at 81.9 yards per game.

Wide receiver Niles Paul averaged 19.9 yards per reception last season and was named Offensive MVP of the Holiday Bowl. A big development in the spring was Mike McNeill switching from tight end to wideout. Nebraska envisions him as a Dallas Clark-type of weapon.

Seniors Keith Williams and Ricky Henry at guard and tackle Mike Smith return as starters on the offensive line. Right tackle Marcel Jones started the first 11 games last year before an injury shelved him. The most intriguing newcomer is junior college transfer Jermarcus "Yoshi" Hardrick.

Gone are Suh and Barry Turner, but in Jared Crick and Pierre Allen, Nebraska returns two of the Big 12's premier defensive linemen. Crick posted 9.5 sacks last season.

The big news on defense is a shift from the base 4-3 to more of a two-linebacker set used in the Texas and Arizona games. The linebackers—Will Compton and Sean Fisher return with the most experience—will align between the tackles and a third hybrid linebacker/nickel back will adjust to the situation. That player figures to be Eric Hagg or Austin Cassidy.

The secondary should be strong, starting with the return of all-conference corner Prince Amukamara, who led the team with 11 pass breakups and had five picks last season. Alfonzo Dennard moved into the starter's role at the other corner spot at midseason and played well down the stretch.

In Alex Henery, the Cornhuskers have one of the nation's top special teams' weapons. He could become the program's career scoring leader, and his ability to consistently drop punts out of bounds inside the 20 is a major weapon.

RECRUITING REPORT

Nebraska recruited a group with a nice mix of athleticism and physicality. The physicality comes from massive junior college offensive tackle Jermarcus Hardrick and four-star offensive tackle Andrew Rodriguez. Junior college linebacker Lavonte David should make an early appearance as a needed physical presence. Athletically, the class is highlighted by running back Braylon Heard. He rushed for close to 2,000 yards as a senior. Brion Carnes, a dual-threat quarterback, led his Bradenton Manatee team to a state championship game appearance in the most competitive division in Florida.

BOWL PROJECTION

HOLIDAY BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING JUSTIN SPRINGER, LB

Springer was ticketed for a starting role when he arrived three years ago, but a torn ACL and hamstring injury slowed his progress. He was the breakthrough player of the spring and earned praises from the coaching staff.

Now, if only the winning candidate can follow the example set by his coach or offensive coordinator. Turner Gill, who has replaced Mark Mangino as head coach, led one of the most dynamic offenses in college football history at Nebraska in the early 1980s.

A few years later, Kansas' new offensive coordinator, Chuck Long, had a Heisman runner-up season at Iowa.

Four Big 12 programs are replacing arguably the most productive quarterbacks in their history and, of that group, Kansas is furthest behind in grooming a successor.

Oklahoma played most of last season with Sam Bradford's backup, Landry Jones, at the controls. Oklahoma State's Brandon Weeden received game-pressure experience after an injury to Zac Robinson. Garrett Gilbert played three-quarters of the BCS title game for injured Colt McCoy.

But no replacement candidate saw any meaningful playing time behind Todd Reesing, and that means the Jayhawks are starting from ground zero in finding their new offensive leader.

The only quarterback who attempted a pass last year besides Reesing was Kale Pick, a sophomore who ran for 167 yards and passed for 22. He's the only candidate with Division I game experience.

The others are redshirt freshman Jordan Webb, who flashed a strong and accurate arm in the spring; junior college transfer Quinn Mecham (3,091 yards passing and 40 touchdowns at Snow College last fall); and a pair of players who operated scout teams in Christian Matthews and Jacob Morse.

Oh, and basketball player Conner Teahan has thrown his hat into the ring.

The Jayhawks will operate out of a spread but will look for more offensive balance. The quarterback will take snaps under center as well as the shotgun. There will also be two-back sets, as the full-back returns to the playbook in Lawrence for the first time since Mangino wasn't coach.

This plays to the team's strengths. Gone are wide receivers Kerry Meier and Dezmon Briscoe—that duo racked up remarkable numbers over the past two seasons—and back is Toben Oporum, who last year became the first freshman to lead the Jayhawks in rushing since 2002.

Angus Quigley might benefit most from the coaching change. Quigley came to Kansas as a running back and was the second-leading rusher in 2008. Then he was moved to linebacker and rarely got on the field. In 2010, he's back at running back and had a productive spring.

Carl Torbush, hired away from Mississippi State, will coordinate the defense, and there's plenty of work to do there, especially in the secondary. Kansas' pass defense has ranked towards the bottom of the Big 12 in the past two seasons. The unit will build around three-year starting corner Chris Harris.

In building its depth chart at linebacker, Kansas got encouraging signs in the spring from Justin Springer and Steven Johnson. They'll join a pair of starters from last season, Huldun Tharp and Drew Dudley.

End Jake Laptad, who had 6.5 sacks in 2009, is back, along with tackle John Williams. Tackle Jamal Greene stepped up in the spring and has playmaker potential.

The kicking game is in good shape with punter Alonso Rojas and placekicker Jacob Branstetter, who made a 57-yard field goal against Oklahoma last season.

RECRUITING REPORT

The Jayhawks finished strong by luring four-star running back Brandon Bourbon away from Stanford. Bourbon and four-star receiver Keeston Terry add a lot of firepower to Turner Gill's first signing class. The majority of the other impact recruits for Kansas are also offensive players, such as wide receiver Ricki Herod Jr., running back James Sims, tight end Trent Smiley and quarterback Quinn Meacham. Jimmy Mundine and Pat Lewandowski are among the top defensive prospects.

DERRICK WASHINGTON, RB

Let's not kid anybody. This is not Missouri's golden era of football.

To say so is to insult those who won conference championships under Don Faurot and who played on New Year's Day under Dan Devine when that was the biggest deal of the season.

No, what Missouri has accomplished in the Gary Pinkel era hasn't reached that level yet. But it's closer than anything we've seen in several decades, and it's terrific stuff.

Five straight bowl years and five consecutive winning seasons? Nobody else in the Big 12 North can make that claim.

Missouri has made it happen with an excellent passing game and its share of playmakers on defense. The mission to remain among the Big 12 power brokers continues with another team that has developed leaders on each side of the ball.

Quarterback Blaine Gabbert delivered the goods in his first season as a starter. As a sophomore, he finished third in the conference in passing yards per game (276.4) and second in pass efficiency. Gabbert is a strong-armed thrower, but his biggest attribute is toughness.

However, Missouri must find new receiving targets. Danario Alexander, who had an amazing season with 113 receptions and 14 touchdowns, and the Tigers' second-leading receiver, Jared Perry, are both gone.

But Pinkel feels good about returning veterans Wes Kemp and Jerrell Jackson, and sophomores Rolandis Woodland and T.J. Moe stepped up in spring ball. So did tight end Michael Egnew, a 6-6 junior who could emerge as one of the Big 12's top receivers at that position.

Tailback Derrick Washington turned in an excellent spring and appears to be poised for his best season. Washington ran for 865 yards and 10 touchdowns last year despite being hampered with nagging knee injuries.

And Washington will be running behind one of the league's most veteran offensive lines with four returning starters. Left tackle Elvis Fisher has started every game for the last two years. Right tackle Dan Hoch was voted the team's top offensive lineman last season.

The defensive leader is Aldon Smith, who in his first season set the school record with 11.5 sacks and totaled 19 tackles for loss. The double teams are coming this season, which should allow the Smith on the other side, Jacques, to have a productive campaign.

Returning starters Will Ebner and Andrew Gachkar lead a strong corps of linebackers. The secondary returns intact, but the group needs to step up.

RATING THE RECRUITS

1	2	3	4	5
Nick Demien OL, 6-6, 295 Demien, a U.S. Army All-American, battled back from a knee injury and was one of the most dominating line prospects in America.	Marcus Murphy RB, 5-9, 170 Murphy was the offensive leader for one of the top programs in Dallas. He is a perfect fit for the Mizzou offense.	James Franklin QB, 6-2, 218 Franklin could be the biggest impact recruit for Mizzou, but he'll have to wait his turn behind Blaine Gabbert.	Marcus Lucas WR, 6-5, 195 Lucas, a nationally ranked receiver with the ability to stretch the field, was the focus of a heated recruiting battle the Tigers won in December.	Tristen Holt CB, 6-0, 185 Holt is a lockdown corner who has the speed and skill to play immediately, especially on special teams.

THE NEXT BIG THING MICHAEL EGNEW, TE

In Missouri's offense, the tight end is a favorite target, and 6-6 junior Egnew could follow Chase Coffman and Martin Rucker as a big-number guy after putting together a breakthrough spring.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

Coach Dan Hawkins knows it's win or else. With no winning record and one bowl appearance in four seasons, there likely won't be a sixth for Hawkins unless substantial progress is made.

A bowl game would do it. Colorado really doesn't want to start over again.

But there are no bold promises, like the 10 victories Hawkins forecasted after the 2008 season, and no lofty expectations. Not in a division that's been won by Nebraska and Missouri throughout Hawkins' tenure.

What there should be is an unquestioned leader at quarterback. And Colorado may be headed that way with Tyler Hansen.

It has been an odd sequence in Boulder over the past couple of years. Cody Hawkins opened the 2008 and 2009 seasons as the starter, but Hansen finished both campaigns as the regular behind center.

Still, both played well in the spring game and the competition will continue into the fall. Hansen is more athletic, with a stronger arm. Hawkins may have a better understanding of the offense and is a little more accurate.

Dan Hawkins likes to say Colorado has no returning starters when it comes to building his team. His first spring depth chart was listed in alphabetical order. In reality, however, the Buffs return 16 starters from a 3-9 team that was one of the youngest in Hawkins' tenure.

Nine offensive starters are back, including the entire line. That group is led by all-conference tackle Nate Solder and guard Ryan Miller.

Scotty McKnight (76 receptions, 6 TDs) and Markques Simas (43 receptions, 585 yards) are back to lead the receiving corps. The big loss among primary pass catchers was all-conference tight end Riar Geer.

The departure of heralded running back Darrell Scott won't hurt the Buffs in the least. He never lived up to his billing and couldn't take reps away from Rodney Stewart, who returns after an 804-yard, nine-touchdown season. Also in the fold is Brian Lockridge, who rushed for more than 200 yards as a freshman in 2007.

With seven defensive starters back, Colorado looks to be in good shape on that side of the ball. Jalil Brown and Jimmy Smith are solid cover corners; B.J. Beatty will be the leader at linebacker, and end Marquez Herrod is the best of the line.

The pieces seem in place for improvement. But areas that Colorado must shore up are the little things that drive coaches nuts, and keep the Buffaloes from making a move: turnovers, penalties and special teams.

THE NEXT BIG THING PARKER ORMS, S

Orms is a redshirt freshman who made the most of his opportunity during spring practice. He drew raves in scrimmages and could get the start at nickel back.

Iowa State was back in the abyss. After a fifth bowl game in six years in 2005, the program posted three straight losing seasons with the next record worse than the previous one.

Cyclones athletic director Jamie Pollard fired popular coach Dan McCarney, then lost his replacement, Gene Chizik, to Auburn. Things were looking like the bad old days at Iowa State.

Enter Paul Rhoads, an Iowan and a bundle of enthusiasm. The Cyclones were drubbed by Iowa, then lost heartbreakers to Kansas State and Kansas, but things seemed different. Iowa State was competitive and needed only a break or two to claim a confirming triumph.

It came in the eighth game. The Cyclones traveled to Nebraska, forced and gladly accepted eight turnovers and pulled out a 9-7 shocker that became a YouTube sensation when Rhoads allowed cameras into the postgame celebration.

The spirited program found its way to bowl eligibility, then outlasted neighboring Minnesota in the postseason for an uplifting 7-6 record.

"A Big 12 championship, I think, is the next goal," wide receiver Jake Williams says.

How do you not love that kind of talk?

But first things first for the Cyclones, who have a few matters to settle. First, there are three new starters at linebacker, plus four others on the defensive side.

Among the linebacker candidates is Matt Tau'fo'ou, who redshirted last year and will get first crack at replacing tackling machine Jesse Smith.

The most interesting newcomer on the defense isn't a newcomer at all. Secondary coach and recruiting coordinator Bobby Elliott is back for his third tour of duty in Ames.

The Cyclones averaged only 20 points a game on offense last season and Rhoads knows that has to increase.

"I would sure hope so," Rhoads says. "That's not good enough in this league or across the country. I would hope with the experience coming back and understanding of our offense, we'll have the opportunity to put more points on the board."

Quarterback Austen Arnaud, a two-year starter, needs to become more consistent. He posted better numbers in 2008 than 2009 and has thrown for as many as 440 yards in a game. He should be more comfortable after having spent a season in coordinator Tom Herman's no-huddle attack.

Iowa State's top offensive weapon is running back Alexander Robinson, who gained 1,195 yards last season.

The receiving corps will be boosted by the return of wideout Darius Reynolds, who broke a bone in his leg last year.

THE NEXT BIG THING MATT TAU'FO'OU, LB

Tau'fo'ou was a junior college All-American at College of San Mateo (Calif.) in 2008. After a redshirt season, he's ready to take a leading role on a defense looking for playmakers.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

Last season proved exclamation points can outpace question marks at Kansas State.

The questions followed the Wildcats through the season, starting at quarterback. But having Bill Snyder back on the sideline transformed K-State in several ways.

The Wildcats were more organized, more focused and tougher than at any time since, well, Snyder walked the sidelines earlier in the decade.

Although Kansas State finished 6-6 and didn't qualify for a bowl game, it went into the season finale at Nebraska with a chance to be the division champion.

What's more, Snyder wanted his returning players to feel a sense of disappointment after the encouraging year.

"We make sure it lingers," Snyder says.

Not finishing well cost the Wildcats a victory at Louisiana-Lafayette, as well as bowl eligibility. Of course, it can be argued that Kansas State finished wonderfully against Iowa State, when it blocked an extra point that would have tied the game late.

At any rate, the message is clear: Play through the final horn of the final game; then look up and see what the scoreboard and record say.

This year it's hard to tell what it will say. Three quarterbacks battled in the spring. Carson Coffman, who opened last year as a starter and lost his job to Grant Gregory before the halfway point in the season, is back. He's competing against Collin Klein and Sammuel Lamur, who sat out last season after transferring from junior college.

Whoever gets the job will have a nice set of targets at his disposal. Aubrey Quarles was set to have a big season before an injury ended his year before it got started. A pair of transfers—Brodrick Smith (Minnesota) and Chris Harper (Oregon)—make this a very strong position for KSU.

Running back Daniel Thomas is one of the Big 12's top returning talents. The league rushing leader at 105.4 yards per game, Thomas was a blend of power and elusiveness who had some of his best moments taking a direct snap. He completed three of four passes, tossed a touchdown and also caught 25 passes.

A backfield that has Thomas lining up behind Lamur would be among the nation's fastest. It would also mean the Wildcats have a Lamur on the field at all times with Sammuel's brother, Emmanuel, returning as the team's top tackler.

Emmanuel Lamur, a 6-4 free safety, is Sammuel's twin and one of seven returning defensive starters. That group includes two in the secondary in Tysyn Hartman and Troy Butler. Up front, Brandon Harold, a Freshman All-American in 2008 who was slowed by injuries last season, will look to regain his form.

THE NEXT BIG THING SAMMUEL LAMUR, QB

At 6-4, Lamur has the size and speed to become the ideal quarterback in the Bill Snyder system. It all depends on how quickly he learns the offense.

BOWL PROJECTION

FIESTA BOWL

 THE NEXT BIG THING
SAM ACHO, DL

Texas always seems to have a havoc-creating defensive lineman/outside linebacker type (think Brian Orakpo and Sergio Kindle over the past two years) and Acho should be that player this season, even if he moves to tackle.

giving the Longhorns a glimmer of hope for a comeback triumph before the Tide put it away.

Gilbert had thrown 26 passes in that freshman season, as Texas continued to take advantage of its greatest asset—McCoy operating out of the spread.

After a year in which Texas threw on

It's all a matter of perspective. Some make changes looking for a formula to take a program from a loser to a winner. At Texas, tweaks and adjustments are intended to transform a national title game finalist into a champion.

The Longhorns are becoming more dedicated to the running game. If your memory pack has enough storage capacity, think of the Ricky Williams era.

Oh, there isn't a Heisman Trophy running back in burnt orange trim, but the idea is in the intent.

"We'd like to go back to the balance we had when we got here," says coach Mack Brown, who's in his 13th season at Austin. "We'd like to go back and be a 60-40 (run to pass) or 50-50 team."

Brown deems this philosophical shift necessary for a few reasons. Foremost, new starting quarterback Garrett Gilbert shouldn't carry as much burden for the offensive success as predecessors Colt McCoy and Vince Young. Not yet.

Gilbert found himself thrust into an unfortunate and amazing opportunity when McCoy went down in the first quarter of the BCS national championship game against Alabama with a shoulder injury that prevented him from throwing.

After several shaky series, Gilbert tossed two touchdown passes against the game's most ferocious defense, 51.3 percent of its snaps, it's back to running basics, and the Longhorns plan to operate some out of the I-formation, under center and utilize the "stretch" plays that have helped shape the formidable Indianapolis Colts offense.

It just so happens that Brown and Colts coach Jim Caldwell are friends from their ACC days, when Brown was at North Carolina and Caldwell at Wake Forest in the 1990s.

Caldwell visited Austin in March, perhaps commiserating on championship game losses as well as sharing ideas, and at least one Texan can't wait to fit into those stretch plays.

"The play is going really well because it gives us several places to hit (a hole)," says running back Fozzy Whittaker, who is listed with Tre Newton on the depth chart at running back.

Texas isn't abandoning the pass, nor are the 'Horns apologizing for a spread that produced a quarterback in McCoy who won more games (45) than any starter in NCAA history.

As for going under center more often, having Gilbert drop back will undoubtedly help him become a better pro prospect, but it's also about giving the running game its best chance to succeed.

"It's downhill running; it allows us to be more aggressive," Brown says. "Over the last few years, we got so sideways. We were spread out all over the place. It was hard to use trick plays and hard to have much misdirection. We feel now we need to be more physical and attack people."

Having an offensive line up to the task will help. The left side looks set with veterans Kyle Hix at tackle and Michael Huey at guard. David Snow, who has started in the past, is at center, and the right side will develop with Tray Allen at guard and Britt Mitchell at tackle.

"Cross-training" was a buzzword in the spring, with players like Chris Whaley working at both running back and the H-back power position, and Barrett Matthews and Greg Smith going back and forth between H-back and tight end.

The receiving corps should be in good shape even though Jordan Shipley has moved on to the NFL. Malcolm Williams and James Kirkendoll will be the next to step up in a big way, with John Chiles and Marquise Goodwin in the slot.

While change is coming to the offense, Will Muschamp's defense looks stable. End Sam Acho, who led Texas with 10 sacks last season, and tackle Kheeston Randall are solid. Alex Okafor holds down the other end spot.

Muschamp is excited about young linebacker Dravanni Johnson, and the secondary should be the strongest part of the defense with corners Curtis Brown, Aaron Williams and Chykie Brown and safety Blake Gideon. The other safety spot could go to Christian Scott.

The return game, especially Williams on punts, looked terrific in the spring. Justin Tucker takes over for reliable Hunter Lawrence at kicker.

RECRUITING REPORT

It was another fantastic class by Mack Brown, who seemingly gets any player he wants out of the most talented state in the nation. A few positions that are particularly strong in this class are wide receiver, defensive line and linebacker. There are five four-star wide receivers in the class, and three are ranked in the national top 100. At defensive end, the Longhorns signed a pass-rushing specialist in Reggie Wilson and a longer, physical body in Jackson Jeffcoat. The Longhorns also added some mass at defensive tackle. Jordan Hicks, Tevin Jackson and Aaron Benson form a linebacking corps as talented as any in the country.

BOWL PROJECTION

SUGAR BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING JAMARKUS McFARLAND, DT

He was the top-rated recruit in OU's 2009 class, but got off to a slow start. It started coming together late in the season, as McFarland helped plug Stanford's power running game in the Sun Bowl.

In 2009, Oklahoma made the most of a lousy season—by Sooner standards.

The final record of 8-5 was buoyed by a regular-season stomping of Oklahoma State and an encouraging triumph over Stanford in the Sun Bowl.

But El Paso isn't where the Sooners expected to end a season that started with a returning Heisman Trophy winner at quarterback, the nation's top playmaking tight end and a defensive tackle who had NFL scouts drooling.

But after QB Sam Bradford went down twice and tight end Jermaine Gresham missed the entire season, defensive tackle Gerald McCoy couldn't win games by himself.

All have moved on, but nothing less than a division championship and run at perfection are expected at Oklahoma.

Which brings us to the 2010 edition of the Sooners.

"I'm very optimistic about this group," coach Bob Stoops says.

He has good reason to.

Quarterback Landry Jones is essentially a year ahead of schedule. He appeared in all 13 games last season—starting 10 because of Bradford's injuries—and passed for 3,198 yards and 26 touchdowns.

"I feel like I stepped in and played pretty well," Jones says.

For the most part, he did. There were the six touchdowns against Tulsa, but also five interceptions against Nebraska.

But with a month to prepare for Stanford in the bowl game, Jones threw for 418 yards and three touchdowns. He brought that momentum into spring practice.

"No comparison to where he was this year versus this time a year ago," Stoops said during spring workouts. "He has a much better understanding of things."

As for those around him, questions abound. The offensive line, a great unknown entering last season, was wrecked by injuries. This year, Oklahoma breaks in three new starters and the two returnees—center Ben Habern and tackle Jarvis Jones—nursed injuries during the spring.

The Sooners are excited about the return of left tackle Donald Stephenson, who missed last year after being suspended from the team for violating team rules. A better year is expected from tackle Cory Brandon, who wound up losing his job in 2009.

At wide receiver, Ryan Broyles returns as one of the Big 12's best. He's a dynamo in a small package (listed at 5-11, 178 pounds), and entered the Sooners' record books for most touchdown receptions (15), receptions (89) and catches in a game with 13 in the Sun Bowl, where he was named the game's Offensive MVP.

The second option is Dejuan Miller, a big target at 6-4 who came on strong at the end of last season. Miller had 25 of his 36 receptions in the final six games. Still, the position isn't as strong as it has been in recent years.

Running back is in good shape. After sharing time with Chris Brown, DeMarco Murray becomes the featured back. He topped 1,000 yards rushing two years ago as a sophomore and has averaged 5.2 yards per carry. Murray is especially dangerous as a receiver out of the backfield, and picked up 41 of his career 86 receptions last season.

Defensively, the Sooners have plenty of stars to replace as usual. McCoy was tremendous. Cornerbacks Dom Franks and Brian Jackson were difference-makers.

Up front, Oklahoma is set at end with third-year starter Jeremy Beal and Frank Alexander.

Adrian Taylor was solid at tackle last season, but he continues to recover from a gruesome broken leg suffered in the Sun Bowl. Stepping in for McCoy is Jamarkus McFarland, whom coaches believe is a rising star.

Linebacker Travis Lewis is one of the top returning defenders in the Big 12. Two years ago, he recorded 19 tackles against Texas and became the league's Defensive Newcomer of the Year. He's been the Sooners' leading tackler in both seasons.

Ronnell Lewis was one of Oklahoma's top special teams players last season and will get a look along with Austin Box at strongside linebacker, with Tom Wort and Daniel Franklin in the middle.

Jonathan Nelson took over as the strong safety late last year and wound up with three interceptions. He was moved to corner in the spring and will team with Demontre Hurst, who saw plenty of action last season as a freshman.

At free safety, Quinton Carter had four picks and was second on the team in tackles. Strong safety belongs to Sam Proctor, who had 10 starts in 2009.

Broyles earned most of his accolades last season as a punt returner. He returned a punt 87 yards for a touchdown against Oklahoma State and ranked third nationally at 15.87 yards per return. The Sooners' other big special teams weapon is punter Tress Way (45.7-yard average), who had one of the top seasons in school history as a freshman.

RECRUITING REPORT

There aren't any weaknesses in the Sooners' class. Oklahoma landed a prototypical big quarterback in Blake Bell, two explosive running backs in Roy Finch and Brennan Clay and a game-breaking wide receiver in Kenny Stills. In the trenches, OU should be in good shape for the next few years by building around Bronson Irwin, Daryl Williams and Austin Woods.

Defensively, the Sooners stole four-star linebacker Corey Nelson from Texas A&M late and also added some size on the defensive interior in Eric Humphrey and Torrea Peterson. With the versatility of prospects such as Justin McCoy, James Haynes, Joe Powell and Tony Jefferson, the Sooners have plenty of options for how to use their talent.

Luke Joeckel OL, 6-6, 280 Joeckel proved to be one of the top offensive tackles in the country and had a great showing at the Under Armour All-American Game.	Cedric Ogbuehi OL, 6-5, 270 One of the few players last season to slow down five-star defensive end Jackson Jeffcoat, Ogbuehi was a U.S. Army All-American.	Jake Matthews OL, 6-5, 275 He has the pedigree and superior physical tools to actually contribute along the offensive line as a freshman.	Shep Klinke OL, 6-7, 290 Klinke will definitely battle for playing time as a true freshman as either a left or right offensive tackle.	Brandon Jackson DT, 6-4, 287 Jackson isn't very flashy, but he is effective—particularly when it comes to stopping the run.

It's all about the defense.

But if Texas A&M improves, the Aggies move up the division ladder and progress is made.

If the Aggies offer the same mind-numbing statistics as last year—giving up 33.5 points and 426.3 total yards per game and surrendering more than 40 points on five occasions—then coach Mike Sherman could be looking for employment elsewhere.

Four defensive coaches from last season are no longer with the Aggies. The new additions include coordinator Tim DeRuyter from Air Force, which finished 10th nationally in scoring defense and 11th in total defense last season, and former A&M great Dat Nguyen.

The overhauled defense will operate out of the 3-4 with plenty of zone blitzes and pressures. Think Pittsburgh Steelers. It's an aggressive, attacking style that should take full advantage of the Aggies' greatest defensive asset, Von Miller, who led the nation with 17 sacks last year.

Miller will line up as a roving linebacker—A&M call it the "jack" position—and will be aligned with offensive tackles, allowing the Aggies to drop him back in coverage.

Nine starters are back on a defense that should be quicker than earlier Sherman versions.

A player to follow is Lucas Patterson, who moved to nose tackle. Patterson had several spring practices during which his play was termed "disruptive."

The offense should again be potent. In Jerrod Johnson, the Aggies return the division's most experienced quarterback.

Johnson was a second-team all-conference choice after setting a slew of school records last season. His best effort came late, in a loss to Texas. Johnson went 26-for-33 for 342 yards and four touchdowns and rushed for 97 yards.

He's had 22 career starts, and showed his toughness in the spring when he returned to drills after offseason surgery to his throwing shoulder following an injury in the Texas game.

The Aggies are loaded at running back with Christine Michael and Cyrus Gray, who combined for 1,601 yards and 15 touchdowns last season. Plus, there's a glut of talent behind them.

The same situation exists at wide receiver. The top three wideouts, who combined to catch 127 passes last season, are back. Uzoma Nwachukwu, Ryan Tannehill and Jeff Fuller also had 17 touchdowns among them.

All of this offense happened behind a line that got better as the year progressed, but plenty of replacements need to be found. Matt Allen, who began his career at LSU, looks like the starting center after playing guard last year.

Hutson Prioleau is the favorite to replace graduated tight end Jamie McCoy.

THE NEXT BIG THING LUKE JOECKEL, OT

Joeckel, a true freshman who graduated early from high school, is a leading candidate to start at right offensive tackle. His solid play against Von Miller in spring workouts helped win over the coaches.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

And now for something completely different. Maybe not completely.

The Red Raiders plan on pitching the pig around the park as usual. But the coach who created the game's most productive passing attack over the last decade, Mike Leach, is out.

Tommy Tuberville, late of Auburn, is in.

Out with pirates and Under Armour; in with Twitter and neckties.

In what will be one of college football's most scrutinized sidelines this season, Tuberville takes over for the never-dull Leach, who was fired after 10 seasons.

In one of Tuberville's first public appearances, he said he didn't arrive in Lubbock to play bowl-eligible football.

"We know how to win championships," he told a fan gathering before spring practice. "You can just imagine the excitement when we do win, because we're going to win a championship. We're going to win two, maybe three, maybe four. It just depends on what the good Lord wants us to have."

Not sure about the desires of higher powers, but Tech fans wouldn't mind seeing the Red Raiders continue their winning ways. It's the only Big 12 program to finish at least .500 in each of the conference's 14 years.

Tuberville says he's planning only tweaks to the offense, and the Red Raiders had to endure spring without either senior vying for the starting QB spot. Taylor Potts and Steven Sheffield both missed workouts with injuries. Sheffield had surgery on the bone in his left finger that he injured against Nebraska, while Potts split the webbing between his right index and middle finger after hitting a teammate's helmet.

Tuberville wants a little more balance in the attack. Baron Batch (884 rushing yards, 14 TDs last season) can expect a heavier workload at running back.

Defensive coordinator James Willis oversees a new 3-4 scheme that should keep everybody engaged.

"We'll play 25 players, run them in and out," Tuberville says.

That's about seven more than were part of the defensive rotation last season. Tuberville noticed that Tech's worst quarter for surrendering points was the fourth. He vows that Tech won't have tired legs late in the game anymore.

Among the returning players whose role will change is LaRon Moore, who will roam everywhere in the secondary.

Getting a pass rush could be a challenge, as Brandon Sharpe and his 15 sacks have graduated.

"We're going to have a lot of fronts and a lot of different looks," Tuberville says. "We'll be a surprise attack team in terms of moving around and using quickness."

THE NEXT BIG THING

BRIAN DUNCAN, OLB/DE

He started as a middle linebacker last season but is now a hybrid 'backer/end because Tech needs his quickness on the edge. Duncan easily made the transition in the spring.

BOWL PROJECTION

TEXAS BOWL

Not to suggest Robert Griffin is super human, but he completed 13 of 19 passes for 226 yards and three touchdowns after tearing the ACL in his right knee. It happened in the season's third game, in what amounted to a scrimmage against Northwestern State, and Griffin was so adamant about continuing the season that he attended the postgame news conference and declared himself fit.

"I played on it, so I should be able to play on it again," Griffin said.

But Bears coach Art Briles knew better. Griffin was shut down for the season, and the decision ended any realistic hopes of the breakthrough season long sought by the program.

There were some nice moments, though. The Bears played Nebraska tough at home, upset Missouri in Columbia and threw a scare into Texas Tech in the finale. But in a year when Baylor returned many of its top defensive players, it needed Griffin.

The recovery went well. He was running in January, going about 95 percent in spring workouts and is expected to be at full strength for fall camp. So, Baylor's quest to become bowl-eligible for the first time in its Big 12 history will start anew.

Griffin flashed his brilliance as a freshman, passing for 2,091 yards and rushing for 843. He set a national freshman record for consecutive passes thrown without an interception (209), and when he dropped track last spring to concentrate on football, Baylor's spirits were lifted even higher.

But Briles knows this can't all be a Griffin thing. When he arrived from Houston after the 2007 season, Briles vowed to upgrade the athleticism across the board.

"We've got Big 12 South players now," Briles says. "When you play in the best division in football, you've got to have the best people."

It appears to be happening. The Bears have assembled a massive offensive line, and that's essential to developing a ground game that produced a mere 100.6 yards per game last season. The good news here is the health of running back Jay Finley, who, after an 865-yard rushing season in 2008, was limited to 370 in nine games last year.

The Bears have upgraded talent at wide receiver, led by Josh Gordon, and Kendall Wright remains a breakaway threat as an inside receiver.

Defensively, it's time for big Phil Taylor to step up. The heralded transfer from Penn State didn't produce as expected in his first season at tackle, but he's now 20 pounds lighter and in better shape.

THE NEXT BIG THING PRINCE KENT, S

Kent originally signed with Miami but detoured through Hargrave Military Academy to improve his grades. The Bears got their claws in him and the freshman will bring speed to Baylor's secondary.

Antonio Johnson is the lone returning starting linebacker. Even with the loss of talented Joe Pawelek, however, the corps should be improved. Elliot Coffey brings a speed element.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

The baton has been passed—from one veteran to another.

Only the Oklahoma State players will notice a different kind of experience at quarterback this season.

Brandon Weeden, who replaces three-year starter Zac Robinson, is a fourth-year junior who is getting his first shot at running a team. At 26, though, he's the old man in the locker room.

Weeden spent five years playing minor league baseball. He returned to college in 2008 and has appeared in a total of four games in two seasons.

One was significant. He subbed for an injured Robinson against Colorado last season and led the Cowboys to a stirring comeback victory.

Weeden will operate a new look under new offensive coordinator Dana Holgorsen, who was hired from Houston.

The Cougars led the nation in total offense, passing offense and scoring offense while running a spread passing attack with Case Keenum. That approach rolled up 512 yards and 45 points in handing Oklahoma State its first loss last season.

Holgorsen knows the territory. He spent seven seasons at Texas Tech before arriving at Houston in 2008. Holgorsen takes over the offense at Oklahoma State from coach Mike Gundy, who says he had become "stretched too thin" performing both duties.

But here's the interesting part: Holgorsen knows the passing game, and the Cowboys' greatest returning strength is a running game led by Kendall Hunter.

Hunter is coming off an injury-filled season in which he rushed for 382 yards. But he had 1,555 yards and 16 touchdowns in 2008 and has averaged six yards per attempt in his career.

There are plenty of questions as Oklahoma State looks to continue its winning ways. Four offensive linemen, including first-round draft selection Russell Okung, must be replaced. The Cowboys aren't deep at wide receiver, a position that took a big hit last year when Dez Bryant was suspended for the season. A big year is needed from Josh Cooper, who has shown great ability when he hasn't been injured.

There are more holes to fill on defense with only two full-time returning starters in end Ugo Chinasa and safety Markelle Martin.

Oklahoma State does return linebacker Orie Lemon, who missed last season with a torn ACL. Lemon started 13 games 2008 and was third on the team in unassisted tackles. He's a senior on a defense that desperately needs veteran leadership.

Cornerback and outside linebacker are the big concerns when it comes to experience on defense.

Linebacker LeRon Furr, who sat out 2009 as a redshirt freshman, may have benefited most from bowl practices last postseason.

THE NEXT BIG THING JOSH COOPER, WR

If he can stay healthy, Cooper could become the latest in a long succession of playmaking wide receivers in Stillwater. Plenty of balls will come his way in this pass-happy offense.

C-USA still looking for that flawless candidate to turn heads at BCS party

By Eric Bailey, Tulsa World

Conference USA would love to break into the BCS bowl party. Getting there has been an elusive task over the past five football seasons. While other schools such as TCU, Utah and Boise State have advanced, C-USA hasn't come close to vaulting a team into the national spotlight.

The blueprint for non-BCS schools is easy. Win all of your games—including some against attractive nonconference foes—and get rewarded with a lucrative BCS invite. But C-USA schools cannot even survive league play. Since realignment in 2005, no one has gone through the conference schedule unscathed.

Houston drew attention to itself last year with an 8-1 start and top-15 BCS ranking. The rally, which included wins against Oklahoma State, Mississippi State and Texas Tech, marked the fourth time since 1998 that a non-BCS program posted at least three wins against BCS schools. However, the Cougars dropped three of their last five games to vanish from consideration.

Tulsa was in a similar situation two years ago. The Golden Hurricane began the season 8-0 and started gaining notice. But a bad November beginning with a nonconference loss at Arkansas brought any BCS hopes to a screeching halt.

In 2010, Houston looks to once again be the league's top threat to crash the BCS party. The Cougars return nine starters, including Heisman Trophy candidate Case Keenum, from the nation's most prolific offense in 2009 and has a challenging nonconference schedule that includes UCLA, Mississippi State and Texas Tech. You will not catch Houston coach Kevin Sumlin and his team looking ahead, though, to the big bowls.

"Those types of things don't happen overnight," Sumlin says. "Some of the teams in the Mountain West and WAC, those were years in the making. They won a lot of football games. We won games and were in a good position last season but fell short. It was a learning process for the program. We were in uncharted waters, being ranked and getting the national media's attention. Now we are going to try to focus and take a week-to-week approach."

ASCENDING

UCF ► The Knights will have the league's top defense and, if quarterback Rob Calabrese can be effective, could head to the C-USA title game for the third time in six seasons.

DESCENDING

TULANE ► The Green Wave will stray from the West Coast scheme, but they don't have the defense to stay with the teams that dominate C-USA using a spread offense.

FOUR FEARLESS FORECASTS

- 1 UCF will represent C-USA in the Liberty Bowl. The Knights have a great defense and an offense that's almost there.
- 2 Tulsa may have a better team than last year (5-7), but it won't make a bowl game due to its difficult schedule.
- 3 SMU will challenge for a debut appearance in the C-USA championship game. June Jones has the Mustangs pointed in the right direction.
- 4 UTEP will start like gangbusters but hit a late-season swoon that, once again, will leave them home for the holidays for a fifth consecutive season.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

Central Florida rode a powerful defense to a Conference USA championship in 2007. And veteran coach George O'Leary is counting on a similar blueprint this season.

"Offense may put people in the seats, but defense wins games," O'Leary says. "We are going to have a defense that's aggressive and plays very stingy."

Experience on both sides of the football will be the biggest confidence booster, as the Knights return seven starters on a unit that led the league in total defense (350.5 yards per game), rushing defense (82.8) and tackles for loss (7.2 per game).

One name familiar to fans and foes alike is defensive end Bruce Miller. The All-America candidate and reigning C-USA Defensive Player of the Year leads the nation among current players with 27 sacks and 44 tackles for loss.

Linebackers Derrick Hallman and Lawrence Young are headhunters, while the secondary is patrolled by Josh Robinson and Kemal Ishmael, who both had outstanding freshman campaigns in 2009.

The Knights' offense has been handed to quarterback Rob Calabrese, who played in seven games last fall with three starts. He sits atop a depth chart that includes freshman Jeffrey Godfrey and Stanford transfer L.D. Crow.

"It is time for Rob Calabrese to take the reins and get things done the way we like to," O'Leary says. "He has all the attributes you want to see in a quarterback. He can throw and run and has a good head on his shoulders."

UCF brings back eight starters, including four on the offensive line. They will pave the way for running back Brynn Harvey, who rushed for 1,109 yards and 14 touchdowns last season.

"The key will be the offensive line," O'Leary says. "They have to have a good year."

The wide receiver corps is anchored by Kamar Aiken (36 receptions, 610 yards, 9 TDs) and A.J. Guyton (44, 572, 1). The squad also welcomes back seven players who caught at least 10 passes in 2009.

Special teams are important for the Knights with weapons in kick return specialists Darin Baldwin, Quincy McDuffie and Jamar Newsome. Each runner has returned a kickoff for at least 72 yards. Blake Clingan is a four-year starter at punter, and kicker Nick Cattoi returns this year as well.

The nonconference schedule is not an easy one, with N.C. State at home and Buffalo and Kansas State on the road.

The Knights will also have one rough 15-day stretch that includes a game against visiting East Carolina, a trip to Houston and a home contest against Southern Miss.

BOWL PROJECTION

BEEF 'O' BRADY'S BOWL

Southern Miss football has showcased a high-energy offense triggered by coach Larry Fedora's aggressive style.

Lost in the Golden Eagles' scoreboard-happy offense is a defense that gave up too many points—and yardage—during a 7-6 campaign last season.

Fedora wants to fix things in preparation for a Conference USA title run.

"I've said this the last two years: The team that plays the best defense in this league will win the league," Fedora says. "I still believe that. Everyone in the league has proved they can move the ball and score points. To win a championship, you have to do that with defense."

Fans attending Southern Miss games saw plenty of long passes last season. But many of those long balls were thrown by the opposition. The secondary needs immediate improvement.

The cornerback candidates are Deron Wilson, Chico Hunter, C.J. Bailey, Alex Smith and Marcal Robinson.

The anchors on the defense are nose tackle Anthony Gray, middle linebacker Korey Williams and strongside linebacker Martez Smith.

"Defensively, we have just about everyone back," Fedora says. "Our guys have experience and should be ready for a tough schedule."

The offense will enter fall camp with Austin Davis as its starting quarterback. Davis tore a ligament in his foot last October and missed the remainder of the season, but Fedora says he won't lose his job because of the injury.

Backup QB Martevius Young had some success filling in for Davis last season and completed 28 passes for 384 yards and four touchdowns in Southern Miss' spring game.

Whoever the quarterback is will have a talented receiver to throw to in DeAndre Brown. The junior suffered a broken leg in the 2008 New Orleans Bowl and didn't fully recover until late last year.

"He is back to 100 percent," Fedora says. "We are expecting a tremendous year going into his junior season. He is as fast as he has ever been and understands the offense better."

The biggest question will be who will replace record-breaking running back Damion Fletcher. V.J. Floyd had a spring game (83 yards rushing, 112 yards receiving) that opened plenty of eyes, but Tracey Lampley, Desmond Johnson and Kendrick Hardy are also pushing for playing time.

Though he hopes for one tailback to rise to the challenge, Fedora says he's not opposed to a carry-by-committee attack.

Ruffin McNeill drew huge cheers during an East Carolina basketball game last year when he appeared on a taped public service announcement.

Welcome home, Coach McNeill.

The 51-year-old was appointed head coach at his alma mater last January, taking over the two-time defending Conference USA champions.

But McNeill didn't inherit a stocked cupboard. The former Texas Tech defensive coordinator will have to replace 15 starters, including nine defensive players from last season's 9-5 squad.

Fans in Greenville will be introduced to new offensive and defensive schemes, as McNeill spent the spring installing a spread offense and an aggressive 4-3 defense.

Who will orchestrate the offense? Former walk-on Brad Wornick, sophomore Josh Jordan (61 passing yards) and redshirt freshman Rio Johnson received looks in the spring. Quarterback Dominique Davis, a transfer from Boston College, also will fight for playing time.

The new quarterback will have a star receiver in Dwayne Harris. The senior caught 83 passes for 873 yards last season and was C-USA's Special Teams Player of the Year.

Seniors Norman Whitley and Jon Williams received plenty of repetitions at running back during spring drills, but keep an eye on freshmen Michael Dobson and Alex Owah.

Only cornerbacks Emanuel Davis and Travis Simmons return on defense, as the unit is learning under new coordinator Brian Mitchell.

The Pirates will battle for their fifth straight bowl game appearance and have to overcome a challenging nonconference schedule.

Doc Holliday was a legendary figure in the Wild West days.

But in the present day, football coach Doc Holliday hopes to create a name for himself at Marshall and in the East Division of C-USA.

Holliday took over the Thundering Herd last December with hopes of molding the program into a consistent upper-echelon squad in the 12-school league.

He has a good nucleus, as the Herd return 14 starters from last year's Little Caesars Pizza Bowl team.

Quarterback Brian Anderson, who threw for 2,646 yards last year, comes back after guiding the Herd to their first bowl victory since 2002.

His offensive cast will not include running back Darius Marshall, who declared early for the NFL draft. But look for Martin Ward (Little Caesars Bowl MVP) to see a lot of time. Terrell Edwards-Maye and Andre Booker will push Ward for carries, as well.

Wide receiver Antavious Wilson had an all-freshman season in 2009, with 60 catches for 724 yards and will join playmaker Courtney Edmonson, who returns after being injured last year. Tight end Lee Smith has paid his dues, playing behind all-league player Cody Slate.

The defense is paced by first-team All-C-USA pick Mario Harvey. The linebacker—nicknamed "Thumper" for his hitting ability—had a team-high 117 tackles and seven sacks last season.

Kellen Harris will be another force at linebacker, while Devin Arrington, Tyson Gale and George Carpenter will fight for playing time.

Michael Janac and Vinny Curry anchor the defensive front, and the secondary includes experienced cornerbacks in DeQuan Bemby and Ahmed Shakoor.

5 UAB BLAZERS

There will be plenty of familiar faces in the UAB football program next season, as the Blazers return eight starters on offense and nine on defense. The coaching staff is one of only four in the FBS (N.C. State, Penn State and Virginia Tech are the others) to remain intact over the past four years.

But one key face is missing in graduated quarterback Joe Webb. The playmaker was Conference USA's Offensive Player of the Year last season after running through and passing over opponents. Replacing him will not be easy.

David Isabelle may be the heir apparent after a solid spring game that included 10 of 14 completions for 123 yards and two touchdowns. The sophomore also raced for 99 yards.

Since a starter has not been named, Isabelle will be challenged by Bryan Ellis, Joe Bento and Jonathan Perry. Whoever emerges will have an arsenal at his disposal.

Wide receiver Frantrell Forrest is the position's top returnee (34 catches, 558 yards, 9 TDs) and ranks in UAB's all-time top five in receptions (126), receiving yards (1,657) and receiving TDs (16).

Running backs Daniel Borne and Justin Brooks come back and will work behind an offensive line that has four players returning.

The defense returns 11 of its top 12 tacklers from 2009, anchored by safety Hiram Atwater, who had a team-high 89 stops last year.

Others to watch include defensive linemen Elliott Henigan and D.J. Reese, along with linebacker Lamanski Ware and cornerback Terrell Springs.

The Blazers have a challenging nonconference schedule that features road games at Tennessee and Mississippi State as well as a home contest against Troy.

New coach Larry Porter was welcomed back to his alma mater with open arms.

Shortly after the handshakes and hugs were over, it was time for Porter to roll up his sleeves and get to work.

Memphis finished with an ugly 2-10 record last season, which prompted the exit of longtime coach Tommy West and the entrance of Porter, who does not plan on taking a long time to rebuild.

First, he needs to find a quarterback. Sophomore Cannon Smith (a Miami, Fla., transfer) emerged as a front-runner during spring drills, but will continue to be challenged by freshmen Ryan Williams and Will Gilchrist, junior college transfer Andy Summerlin and Tyler Bass, the only roster player to take a college snap.

Running backs Jerrell Rhodes, Gregory Ray and Wisconsin transfer Lance Smith (who had a broken leg in the spring) will try to help an offense that needs to replace Curtis Steele.

Marcus Rucker and Jermaine McKenzie hope to take over for prolific wide receivers Carlos Singleton and Duke Calhoun.

The entire offensive line returns and will be anchored by Dominik Riley and Ronald Leary.

Jay Hopson, a former Michigan assistant, will take charge of the defense, while ex-Alabama head coach Mike DuBose is the line coach.

Porter's mini rebuilding phase this spring focused on four "T's"—technique, toughness, tackling and turnovers.

Safety Marcus Ball will provide leadership needed on a unit that struggled mightily last season, while defensive lineman Dontari Poe and linebacker Jamon Hughes should both be heard from.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

Conference USA's 2010 football landscape took shape during one afternoon last January when Houston quarterback Case Keenum decided not to chase NFL riches and announced he would return for his senior season.

"We have a chance to do something special this season," Keenum said at the time. "I want to win a conference championship, win another bowl game and take a shot at the BCS."

Keenum's return makes Houston a comfortable favorite to repeat as C-USA West Division champion. The record-setting quarterback joins eight other starters on a unit that topped college football in total offense (563.4 yards), passing offense (433.7) and scoring offense (42.2 points) in 2009.

Keenum, who finished eighth in the Heisman Trophy balloting, threw for 5,671 yards and 44 touchdowns last season. All of his top skill players have returned and third-year coach Kevin Sumlin has challenged the gunslinger to do even better this fall.

"The pieces are in place for him to have another exceptional season," Sumlin says. "We gave him more flexibility last year as he became more comfortable in what we are doing. That was reflective by his numbers."

Abundant talent can be found on offense, as C-USA Newcomer of the Year James Cleveland (104 catches, 1,214 yards, 14 TDs) returns at wide receiver, as do juniors Tyron Carrier (91, 1,029, 7) and Patrick Edwards (85, 1,021, 6). It marked just the fourth time in history that three teammates recorded at least 1,000 receiving yards each in the same season.

Running backs Bryce Beall and Charles Sims are former C-USA Freshman-of-the-Year honorees. They'll be protected by three returning starters on the offensive line.

But Sumlin is quick to remind that there is much for the program to work on.

Houston ranked 111th in total defense last season, imploding down the stretch. The Cougars gave up at least 37 points in five of their final seven games.

Sumlin responded by hiring longtime defensive coach Brian Stewart, who has college and NFL experience. The new coordinator spent the spring installing a 3-4 scheme, which will stress speed and aggressiveness.

"We're just trying to put our best athletes on the field and play to our strength," Sumlin says.

Junior linebacker Marcus McGraw will be the key stopper, while Jamal Robinson and Nick Saenz will anchor the secondary.

Carrier will be a potent weapon on special teams after returning four kickoffs for touchdowns last season. Sophomore kicker Matt Hogan was 12-for-12 on field goal attempts a year ago.

THE NEXT BIG THING MATANGI TONGA, NT

A junior college transfer from the College of San Mateo (Calif.), the former BYU player has the tools and size (6-2, 290 pounds) to clog the middle of the defensive line.

Ja'Terian Douglas RB, 5-11, 180 As a senior, Douglas rushed for more than 1,800 yards at Arlington (Texas) Lamar after eclipsing the 2,000-yard mark as a junior.	Milton Howell ATH, 6-2, 190 Howell played quarterback at Navarro College in the Texas junior college ranks, but he could play offense or defense for the Golden Hurricane.	Derrick Hall ATH, 5-10, 210 A highly recruited prospect coming out of high school, the speedy Hall comes to Tulsa following two years in junior college.	Relus Chance DE, 6-5, 215 Chance was the second player to commit to Tulsa's 2010 class. At 6-5, he was also a high school basketball and track standout.	Jake Alexander OL, 6-2, 270 Alexander chose Tulsa over LSU, Michigan State, Texas A&M and more. He was rated as one of the top centers in the nation.

Todd Graham is rarely at a loss for words, but reliving Tulsa's 2009 season seems difficult for the fourth-year coach.

"No one was more surprised than I was that we lost so many close games, that we were not in a bowl game or we were not in the conference championship game," Graham says. "The difference between winning and losing is very small. We catch an onside kick; we are in a bowl game. We catch an interception, then we have seven wins. But would have, could have or should have does not count."

Tulsa stayed home in the postseason for the first time since 2004 after a disappointing 5-7 season that included a six-game losing streak marred by late-game collapses. It was not a pleasant feeling for a program that had played in back-to-back Conference USA championships.

The Golden Hurricane led the nation in total offense in 2007 and 2008, but they took a big step back last fall. Injuries plagued the offensive line, which made life difficult for first-year starting quarterback G.J. Kinne.

Throw in the departure of offensive mastermind Gus Malzahn, and it was a rough year.

Graham did not waste time trying to fix the problem. He quickly hired Chad Morris to share coordinator duties with fourth-year assistant Herb Hand. A Texas high school coach and close friend of Malzahn who subscribes to the same hurry-up, no-huddle concept, Morris used the attack to win back-to-back state titles at Lake Travis High School in Austin.

The spring was used to reset the offense. Kinne drew comfort in the system and Morris was excited about having playmakers such as halfback Charles Clay and wide receivers Damaris Johnson, Trae Johnson and A.J. Whitmore.

The key for offensive success will be the line. Tulsa started eight different lineups in a dozen games last fall after injuries decimated the unit. Forced experience last season may help a line anchored by junior tackle Tyler Holmes, a freshman All-American who saw limited work last year.

Damaris Johnson is worth the price of admission. The receiver/kick return specialist was ranked in the top five nationally in his first two seasons and led the country with an average of 224.4 all-purpose yards per game in 2009.

The Hurricane defense improved last fall but need to continue to make strides. Three of the top four tacklers will return this season in junior safety DeAndre Brown (102 tackles), safety Dexter McCoil (85) and senior linebacker Tanner Antle (78), who is the heart and soul of the defense. Tulsa also will benefit from the return of cornerback Charles Davis, who missed last season with a torn ACL. Sophomore defensive end Cory Dorris is expected to contribute, as well.

THE NEXT BIG THING CORY DORRIS, DE

The sophomore from nearby Jenks had a solid first season that included 54 tackles, including 5.5 stops behind the line of scrimmage.

June Jones brought jubilation to SMU last season after guiding the Mustangs to a bowl game for the first time since 1984, right before the school was hit with the "death penalty."

"You want to teach the kids how to win consistently," Jones told the Dallas Morning News. "One year at 8-5 is not where we want to be. We want to be conference champions. We have got to take another step in doing that. As you keep inching that along and keep getting more players coming in, your vision becomes bigger."

The first step in future improvement has been settled. Sophomore quarterback Kyle Padron is guiding the team's run-and-shoot attack. He directed the Mustangs to a 5-1 mark in the final six games in 2009, including an MVP performance at the Hawaii Bowl.

Padron will have to find another favorite target following the graduation of Emmanuel Sanders, the school's all-time leading wide receiver.

Returning receivers Cole Beasley, Terrance Wilkerson and Aldrick Robinson logged at least 40 receptions each last season and will try to become go-to players.

The running back search will begin following Shawn-brey McNeal's early departure toward an NFL dream.

Zach Line, last year's backup, missed spring practice and will compete with signees Darryl Fields and Kevin Pope this fall.

The defense improved in 2009, and Jones is looking for continued progress. The key will be replacing leading tackler Chase Kennemer. But linebackers Youri Yenga, Pete Fleps and Ja'Gared Davis all return in the 3-4 attack.

Mike Price may be feeling a little heat in the west Texas desert these days.

The seventh-year UTEP coach has not had a winning season since 2005, which was capped by the program's last visit to a bowl game.

A veteran offense—highlighted by running back Donald Buckram and quarterback Trevor Vittatoe—will try to push UTEP back into the postseason.

Vittatoe is expected to remain atop the depth chart despite having shoulder surgery and also being suspended for the first portion of spring football for breaking team rules. He has thrown for 9,683 yards and is on track to break former QB Jordan Palmer's all-time passing marks at UTEP.

Buckram could be Conference USA's dominant running back. He raced for 1,594 yards and 18 touchdowns last season, and his average of 132.8 yards per game is the second-highest total among returning players next season.

"I think he will be even better this year," Price says. "He's bigger ... by the time the season starts, he'll be more of a physical running back."

The Miners were 18th nationally in total offense a year ago, but a porous defense led to a 4-8 season.

UTEP was 110th in total defense and could not stop the run. To curb the poor performances, Price hired a new defensive coordinator in Andre Patterson, who will toss the Miners' 3-3-5 defensive scheme for a more traditional 4-3 look.

Seniors Braxton Amy (safety) and Robert Soleyljacks (defensive end) and junior linebacker Royzell Smith will anchor the defense.

5 RICE OWLS

What a difference a year can make.

Coach David Bailiff hoisted the 2008 Texas Bowl trophy after Rice captured its first postseason victory in 55 seasons. Last year, the Owls lost their opening nine games en route to an ugly 2-10 record.

Entering 2010, the Owls will focus on improving the defense and answering questions on offense.

Rice had 14 starters who were underclassmen, which tied Louisiana Tech for the youngest in the country last year.

A starting quarterback will be chosen between transfers Taylor Cook (Miami), Nick Fanuzzi (Alabama) and redshirt freshman Taylor McHargue. All three spent the spring grasping new offensive coordinator David Beaty's system.

High hopes have been placed on another transfer. Former Michigan running back Sam McGuffie leads a position group that includes Charles Ross and Tyler Smith.

The Owls ranked 104th nationally running the football last season, but the offensive line did gain valuable experience. All five linemen, headed by offensive tackle Scott Mitchell, will be back this fall.

The defense also needs an overhaul after holding no opponent to less than 20 points last season.

Seven different teams put up at least 40 points against an Owls unit that allowed an average of 43.1 points a game. That statistic ranked last in college football.

Safety Travis Bradshaw is the defensive anchor. The junior averaged 10.1 tackles a game last year, which was good enough for fourth in C-USA.

Defensive end Scott Solomon can also cause havoc for opposing offensive linemen.

6 TULANE GREEN WAVE

Tulane may be entering the "spread offense" generation that has recently overtaken Conference USA football.

Then again, maybe not.

Offensive coordinator Dan Dodd told the New Orleans Times-Picayune that the Green Wave's new style "is the same stuff that coach (Bob) Toledo has been running forever. We have kind of de-emphasized the two-back and gotten more into three wides. That is the only difference."

While shy to call it a "spread" attack, the Green Wave needed to change to keep up with the high-octane offenses that dominate the C-USA's West Division. Tulane ranked 115th nationally in scoring offense last year, averaging just 16.1 points per game.

Quarterback Ryan Griffin is expected to trigger the attack, but he could be pressed by backup Kevin Moore during fall camp.

Running back Albert Williams made a name for himself during spring drills and could emerge as a replacement for Andre' Anderson.

The Green Wave lost wide receiver Jeremy Williams, which could force Casey Robottom to become the featured wideout in the offensive attack.

The defense struggled last season, allowing nearly 423 yards per game. Tulane is hopeful that defensive backs such as Phillip Davis and Shakiel Smith will have used 2009 as a learning experience and establish themselves as team leaders.

The linebacker spot will be one to watch, as the Green Wave signed six players who hope to help immediately.

Ross Thevenot was a potent weapon as a punter and kicker last year. Following his graduation, the Green Wave will search for a replacement.

FOUR FEARLESS FORECASTS

1 Air Force will be more dangerous offensively now that junior quarterback Tim Jefferson is able to focus 100 percent on football. Last year, he had to deal with academic issues, which may have hampered his performance.

2 Wyoming should return to a bowl game now that coach Dave Christensen has a quarterback he can rely on in sophomore Austyn Carta-Samuels, the Mountain West's Freshman of the Year in 2009. Carta-Samuels guided the Cowboys to four come-from-behind wins last season.

3 New Mexico will continue to struggle as second-year coach Mike Locksley deals with a young team that couldn't run the ball or stop the run a year ago.

4 BYU's run of five consecutive Las Vegas Bowl appearances will come to an end as the Cougars will have to settle for a trip to San Diego and the Poinsettia Bowl. Look for either TCU or Utah to get the Vegas invite in December.

MWC will be hard-pressed to produce an encore to special 2009 campaign

By Steve Carp, Las Vegas Review-Journal

When it came to football and his league, the only thing that could have brought a bigger smile to the face of Mountain West commissioner Craig Thompson last January would have been a win in the Fiesta Bowl by TCU.

Otherwise, 2009 was the best season the league has enjoyed since it was formed in 1999. In addition to TCU's run to the Bowl Championship Series, the Mountain West placed four other teams in bowl games, with all coming away victorious.

BYU won the Las Vegas Bowl, Utah captured the Poinsettia Bowl, Air Force was victorious in the Armed Forces Bowl and Wyoming won the New Mexico Bowl. What commissioner wouldn't be happy with a 4-1 postseason?

Now, the challenge for the league is twofold. First, can it consistently keep putting a team in the BCS? Utah and TCU have now given the MWC back-to-back appearances. And, second, can the league's bottom tier (Colorado State, New Mexico and UNLV) make enough progress to boost the overall power rating for the Mountain West?

Addressing the initial question, it's going to be up to TCU, Utah and BYU to make it happen. The Horned Frogs and Cougars lost key personnel after the 2009 season. But if TCU can fill the gap created by the loss of defensive lineman Jerry Hughes and BYU can replace quarterback Max Hall and running back Harvey Unga, perhaps either can make a run at the BCS.

For Utah, which returns 14 starters (8 on offense), it may come down to the season opener, when the Utes play host to Pittsburgh. A loss to the Panthers, and Utah's BCS dreams will die right there at Rice-Eccles Stadium. But with a win, some momentum would be established until the next critical nonconference game, Oct. 9 at Iowa State. And if the Utes get past the Cyclones unscathed, the final test would come Nov. 13 at Notre Dame.

The second part of the equation may depend on how quickly new coach Bobby Hauck can get UNLV over the hump after Mike Sanford failed to post a winning record in five seasons. Hauck had great success at FCS Montana, but this is a big step up.

RECRUITING ROUNDUP

By Jeremy Crabtree, Rivals.com

1. UTAH The Utes landed the best recruiting class by a program outside the Big Six conferences. Four-star offensive lineman John Cullen and four-star linebacker V.J. Fehoko lead the way.

2. BYU The Cougars scored perhaps the most college-ready quarterback in the 2010 class in Jake Heaps.

3. TCU The Horned Frogs scored one of its best classes ever with two four-star recruits and 16 three-star prospects.

4. COLORADO STATE The Rams did a tremendous job late by snagging four-star QB Pete Thomas away from Arizona State and three-star back Tony Drake from Michigan.

5. SAN DIEGO STATE The Aztecs took a nice step forward with the additions of defensive end Perry Jackson and offensive lineman Juan Bolanos.

6. NEW MEXICO The Lobos managed to turn heads on signing day when they scored a pledge from four-star DT Calvin Smith from Florida.

7. UNLV The new coaching staff did a lot of damage late, scoring quality commitments from players such as Dionza Bradford, Kurt Davis and Taylor Barnhill.

8. WYOMING Running back Nehemie Kankolongo could be one of the biggest gets for any program in the MWC.

9. AIR FORCE The Falcons recruit better than any other military academy.

ASCENDING

WYOMING ▶ The Cowboys showed renewed toughness and resiliency during coach Dave Christensen's first season. Now, with a more experienced and deeper team, Wyoming should be competitive from start to finish.

DESCENDING

BYU ▶ Not only did the Cougars lose their star quarterback (Max Hall) and tight end (Dennis Pitta), BYU was dealt a major blow when star running back Harvey Unga withdrew from school because of an honor code violation.

PICK

ANDY DALTON, QB

The greatest season in TCU history ended on a bit of a downer with a 17-10 loss to Boise State in the Fiesta Bowl. But nobody's throwing the big fish that was the Horned Frogs' 12-1 season back into the lake.

In fact, coach Gary Patterson is brimming with confidence as his team tries to return to a Bowl Championship Series game. He's got a big-time quarterback, some stars up front to block and open holes for a very good running game. On defense, he has linebackers who can cover the field and a secondary that can make big plays. Oh, and TCU's kicking game is as good as any in the Mountain West.

The fact that Patterson didn't leave Fort Worth after last season indicates how he feels about TCU's immediate future. With 54 lettermen and 17 starters returning, the Horned Frogs aren't going away anytime soon.

Andy Dalton has developed into a reliable, talented quarterback who understands Patterson's multiple offense. Dalton, the Mountain West's Offensive Player of the Year last season, ranked second in the league and eighth in the nation in pass efficiency (151.8) and his 212-yard passing average was third in the MWC. He also cut down on his mistakes, throwing just eight interceptions last year compared to 23

BULLET POINTS

- Over the last five seasons, TCU is 45-1 when ahead or even in turnover margin.
- Jeremy Kerley returned two punts for touchdowns last year, including a 71-yarder against SMU.
- TCU has had the first-team all-conference return specialist in each of the five years it has been in the Mountain West.

BOWL PROJECTION

LAS VEGAS BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING JEREMY KERLEY, WR

Kerley, a senior, can beat you several ways, including as a receiver and in the return game. He is quick, elusive and has a knack for turning ordinary plays into big gainers.

touchdowns while passing for 2,756 yards, a career best.

And Dalton has a plethora of targets to hook up with. Seniors Jeremy Kerley and Jimmy Young and junior Antoine Hicks are as good a trio as there is in the league. Kerley had 44 receptions last year to lead TCU, while Young had 33 grabs. Hicks was the team's home run threat, scoring 10 times overall, including 75-yard TD grabs in back-to-back games against BYU and UNLV.

And for teams that think they can blitz Dalton and force him into mistakes, TCU counters with a young and talented group of running backs. Matthew Tucker was Sporting News' MWC Freshman of the Year in 2009, as he scored eight TDs and averaged 6.4 yards per carry. Sophomore Ed Wesley had 137 yards against Utah last year and can also catch the ball out of the backfield. Three of his seven touchdowns came via the air.

The offensive line will have a lot to do with whether TCU can return to the BCS. Four starters are back, including first-team all-conference picks in center Jake Kirkpatrick and tackle Marcus Cannon. Kirkpatrick was a Remington Trophy finalist last year as a junior, while Cannon (6-5, 350 pounds) did not allow a sack in 2009.

That duo will be joined up front by guards Kyle Dooley and Josh Vernon. The key will be how well Zach Roth performs at left tackle in replacing Marshall Newhouse. At tight end, Evan Frosch was an honorable mention all-conference performer as a junior last season. He's one more target for Dalton to make use of.

But while TCU's offense is capable of carrying its share of the load, it's the defense that allows the Horned Frogs to be among the nation's elite. That unit led the nation in total defense last season, allowing only 239.7 yards a game. In addition, the team's 12.4 first downs allowed per game were the fewest in the country. And the Frogs' scoring defense (12.8 points per game) was sixth best in the nation.

Can the Horned Frogs repeat those gaudy numbers? It won't be easy now that Jerry Hughes, the team's All-America defensive end, is headed to the NFL.

Fortunately for Patterson, his ability to recruit depth over the past few years will help soften the loss of his star. Wayne Daniels had 5.5 sacks last year and Braylon Broughton was coming on toward the end of last season. The junior could be someone to keep an eye on in 2010.

Joining Daniels and Broughton up front will be Cory Grant, a second-team all-conference defensive tackle, and nose tackle Kelly Griffin.

Patterson's team plays a 4-2-5 defense, and Tank Carder allows TCU to get away with playing just two linebackers. The 6-2 junior covers a lot of ground in the middle and had 89 tackles and 10 pass breakups last season. Opposing offenses always have to account for his whereabouts on the field.

Tanner Brock, a sophomore who is also a key member of TCU's special teams, joins Carder as the other linebacker.

The secondary has three solid safeties returning, led by free safety Tejay Johnson, who had three interceptions in 2009. Junior corner Greg McCoy and senior Jason Teague both added two picks, as opponents are again going to have a tough time throwing against TCU.

The kicking game has experience with placekicker Ross Evans and punter Anson Kelton back for their third season as starters.

RECRUITING REPORT

You have to love what TCU did in grabbing dynamic prospects Ethan Grant (RB) and Curtis Carter (ATH). They each have speed and are playmakers. Sam Carter and Matt Brown are two three-star quarterbacks headed to TCU who fit the mold of what Gary Patterson wants in his leaders. Wide receiver Chris Hawkins is one to watch, too. Stephen Bryant, Travaras Battle-Smith, Matt Anderson, Jonathan Anderson, David Johnson, Marcus Mallett, Blake Roberts, Elisha Olabode and Michael Thompson are all very good prospects who will help this program.

BOWL PROJECTION

POINSETTIA BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING

EDDIE WIDE, RB

Wide was a backup running back at the start of last year, but ended 2009 as Utah's go-to guy in the backfield. Now, the senior could emerge as a star in the Mountain West with his speed and strength as a ballcarrier.

EDDIE WIDE, RB

Last season, nobody was expecting a repeat of Utah's 2008 campaign, when the team found itself in the Sugar Bowl and then handed Alabama its houndstooth hat. But with a 10-3 record and Poinsettia Bowl victory, 2009 was still pretty good for coach Kyle Whittingham and the Utes.

With TCU now the Mountain West team with the target on its chest, Utah can try and make a run back to a BCS bowl in 2010 and will do so with an experienced offense led by a reliable running attack that should allow the team to control the clock and tempo.

With eight starters back on offense, including senior running back Eddie Wide and four of five offensive linemen, Utah will grind on its opponents and try to wear them down. Wide became only the 10th player in school history to rush for at least 1,000 yards and finished with 1,069. He took full advantage of his opportunity when starter Matt Asiata went down with a knee injury in Week 4.

The good news for Utah is that the NCAA granted Asiata another year of eligibility and the senior, who missed spring drills while still on the mend from surgery, is expected to be ready for the Utes' Sept. 2 opener against Pittsburgh.

With Wide and Asiata handling the running chores and Zane Taylor, Caleb Schlauderaff, Tevita Stevens and Tony Bergstrom blocking up front for them, quarterback Jordan Wynn can continue his development without being asked to do too much.

Wynn started the last five games in 2009 and averaged 249.4 yards per game through the air. He may not have to throw as often this year as a sophomore. But if he does, look for him to hook up often with senior receiver Jereme Brooks, who had 56 receptions last year and a team-best seven touchdowns.

The Utes are strong on the defensive line with tackles Dave Kruger and Sealver Siliga. Whittingham hopes ends Junior Tui'one and Lei Talamaiavao can help stop the run and get pressure on the opposing quarterback. If they can't, it will put pressure on shutdown cornerback Brandon Burton, who had only one interception last year—mostly because teams were reluctant to throw in his direction. Lamar Chapman moves into the starting lineup after being a nickel back last season.

The Utes' 4-3 alignment will be tested because they are bringing in a brand new linebacking corps. Nai Fotu moves back to linebacker after playing end a year ago. Senior Chad Manis will likely start at strongside linebacker, with Jamel King, Matt Martinez and J.J. Williams competing for the weakside spot.

Utah brought in a strong recruiting class, hitting California and Texas hard to replenish the roster. The Utes also reached into the junior college ranks at nearby Snow College for three players.

Offensively, the depth is there. Defensively, it will be a question of how quickly the newcomers can contribute that may determine how successful Whittingham's team is this year.

One thing is certain: The Utah coach hasn't had much slippage since he took over for Urban Meyer five years ago. He's 47-17 during his career at Utah and has been to a bowl game every year. Look for that trend to continue in 2010.

RECRUITING REPORT

If you were to draw up a quarterback who was a perfect fit for the Utah offense, 6-3, 205-pound Brian Blechen would be your prototype. He'll have plenty of weapons at his disposal, led by wide receivers Terrell Reese—a steal from Texas—and Kenneth Scott from California. Scott has great hands and is tough enough to take shots on routes over the middle. The Utes also went to Hawaii to find a great fit for their defense in 5-11, 215-pound linebacker V.J. Fehoko. Coach Kyle Whittingham also fortified his offensive line with the addition of 6-2, 260-pound Zach Bolton, who was one of the best prep prospects to come out of Houston last year.

Troy Calhoun continues to do good things as the Falcons' head coach. Witness last year's 8-5 record and 47-20 win over Houston in the Armed Forces Bowl. In three years, Calhoun is 25-14.

Calhoun has an exciting, fast and hard-hitting secondary to anchor his defense and the usual assortment of tough guys running the ball on offense. Which means Air Force should have another solid year.

The secondary is anchored by Anthony Wright, who led the team with seven interceptions last year, three of which were returned for touchdowns. In addition, Air Force also has back Reggie Rembert (43 tackles, 3 interceptions) and Jon Davis (56, 3).

The Falcons were true ballhawks last year, as their defensive backfield was and continues to be one of the most athletic in school history. Calhoun encourages his guys to fly to the ball and make plays, and they have responded with an attacking defense that gets the Air Force offense into good field position.

Air Force allowed just 15.7 points a game last year, good for 10th overall in the nation. Only TCU had a better scoring defense in the Mountain West. The Falcons also led the MWC in pass defense, giving up just 154.3 yards through the air per game.

However, that defense lost six starters from last year, so Calhoun has some gaps to fill. But he still has defensive lineman Rick Ricketts to pressure opposing quarterbacks. Ricketts had four sacks and 57 tackles last year. Air Force also returns outside linebacker Andre Morris, who had 65 tackles and three sacks in '09.

Offensively, Air Force has been throwing the ball more effectively the last couple of years even though statistics would indicate otherwise. Yes, the Falcons were at the bottom of the Mountain West with just 88.4 yards per game through the air last season. But quarterback Tim Jefferson has a strong arm and Kevin Fogler and Jonathan Warzeka combined for 43 catches, with Fogler adding five touchdowns.

Still, it's always run first and pass second at Air Force, and look for a heavy dose of running back Jared Tew, who had 970 yards and averaged 4.1 yards per carry last year.

Jefferson should be more effective as a junior. He got better as last season went on and with his academic issues now behind him, Jefferson figures to be more focused.

One trend that Calhoun managed to reverse last year was Air Force's habit of fading late in the season. In 2009, the Falcons finished the year strong, winning four of their last five, including the bowl game over Houston. If Air Force is going to keep making progress, that's the one trend that needs to continue: Start fast and finish even faster.

THE NEXT BIG THING ASHER CLARK, FB

Clark averaged 5.7 yards and scored seven touchdowns as a sophomore. At just 5-8, he's tough to find and even tougher to bring down.

At every school, replacing the quarterback is a big deal. In Provo, the discussion of who will be BYU's signal-caller goes to a different level. The chat rooms and Internet message boards have been overloaded by fans trying to figure out who is best suited to take Max Hall's place under center this season.

Replacing Hall will be the No. 1 challenge for Cougars coach Bronco Mendenhall. Hall was a three-year starter and, as a senior, he passed for 3,560 yards and 33 touchdowns. Mendenhall's choices are Riley Nelson, who was Hall's backup last year and appeared in mop-up duty in seven games; true freshman Jake Heaps, considered the top quarterback prospect in the nation by Scout.com; and sophomore James Lark, who was on his church mission a year ago.

The Cougar faithful were prepared for Hall's departure, but hopes for a solid season took an unexpected blow in April when running back Harvey Unga voluntarily withdrew from school due to an honor code violation. Unga gained 1,087 rushing yards in 2009, his third straight 1,000-yard campaign. JJ Di Luigi and Bryan Kariya, both juniors, now figure to split the load in the backfield.

While BYU will have to break in new starters at quarterback and running back, there are two solid weapons at wide receiver, as McKay Jacobson (24.2 yards per catch last season) and O'Neill Chambers combined for more than 900 receiving yards last year. Jacobson is a deep threat while Chambers enjoys going over the middle and making contact with safeties.

The Cougars have recorded four straight seasons of at least 10 wins and Mendenhall has maintained a consistent winner.

What happened to the Rams?

It appeared things were heading in the right direction with Steve Fairchild. But last year was a step backwards, as Colorado State went winless in the Mountain West at 0-8 and finished 3-9 overall. Suffice to say, no one in Fort Collins was happy, least of all Fairchild, who is beginning his third year as head coach.

To prevent history from repeating itself, Colorado State is going back to its roots—running the football and playing good defense.

The running game will be built around Leonard Mason, who gained 766 yards on the ground last year, and John Mosure, who had 650 rushing yards. They will be asked to provide the stability that a ball-control offense requires.

UCLA transfer Raymond Carter brings speed and quickness in the backfield and redshirt freshman full-back Chris Nwoke will look to pound opposing defenses.

Colorado State's problem is that the guys up front who are expected to open holes for the backs are inexperienced. Tackle Paul Madsen (the lone returning starter from last year), junior guard Jake Gdowski and senior tackle Mark Starr are the most experienced linemen.

As for who will play quarterback, it will be a battle between true freshman Pete Thomas, junior T.J. Borchy, redshirt freshman Nico Ranieri and senior Jon Eastman, who started one game for Colorado State last season.

Whoever it is will be asked to manage the game and not take risks—just get the ball to the backs and get out of the way.

If CSU is running the ball well, it'll be up to the defense to keep the Rams in games. With nine starters back, that shouldn't be much to ask.

6 WYOMING COWBOYS

The Cowboys had a new coach, found a new quarterback and regained a measure of respectability in 2009, going 7-6 and winning the New Mexico Bowl.

It seems football matters once again in Laramie, as Dave Christensen revived a program's sagging fortunes by taking a gamble on a freshman QB and believing in his players. Wyoming won four games with fourth-quarter rallies by finding ways to hang in games and eventually come out on top.

Sixteen starters are back from that team, which has Wyoming fans excited about 2010. And while it may be early to be making reservations to attend a second consecutive bowl, the fact is the Cowboys are a pretty good football team and, barring any major slippage, should be in the postseason mix.

A lot will depend on the continued progress of sophomore QB Austyn Carta-Samuels, Wyoming's run-pass threat. Carta-Samuels flourished as a freshman while Christensen limited the playbook, and he executed what was called on a consistent basis. Carta-Samuels passed for 1,953 yards and ran for another 366. With the plan to expand the playbook, look for him to be a big part of the offense's progress.

The same is true for wide receiver David Leonard, who had 77 receptions and averaged 9.2 yards per catch in 2009. He has great hands and is likely to catch anything thrown in his vicinity.

With seven starters back on defense, Wyoming should continue to stay in close games. Free safety Chris Prosinski is an all-conference talent and the Gipson brothers, Marcell and Tashaun, give Wyoming quality cornerbacks.

7 NEW MEXICO LOBOS

Going 1-11 was not what New Mexico had in mind when it brought Mike Locksley in to replace Rocky Long. The Lobo brass also wasn't planning on Locksley getting physical with members of his staff and ultimately getting suspended for one game.

That said, the Lobos are looking to wipe the slate clean and act as though 2009 never happened. But that's easier said than done, given how bad things were.

To turn the page, Locksley preached positive thinking to his team in the spring. New Mexico did see improvement in some areas, including fewer penalties, fewer turnovers and more rushing yards.

But many areas need shoring up. The Lobos' no-huddle spread offense managed just 16.3 points a game last year. And there's going to be a new quarterback in charge of generating more points. It could be one of five candidates, including true freshmen Stump Godfrey and Tarean Austin. More than likely, however, senior Tate Smith, junior Brad Gruner or sophomore B.R. Holbrook will get the nod.

New Mexico should be able to run the ball with Demond Dennis, who led the team with 427 rushing yards and three touchdowns last year. James Wright and Kasey Carrier are also back and both showed signs of being able to run effectively in 2009.

Whoever is throwing the ball will likely look toward Ty Kirk, who had 36 receptions last season.

Defensively, New Mexico will be led by all-conference linebacker Carmen Messina, whose 162 tackles topped the nation in 2009. Defensive backs Anthony Hooks and Nathan Enriquez are talented. The big question is if the line can bring pressure this year.

The Aztecs were not expected to do much in Brady Hoke's first year as head coach. But by going 4-8 and staying out of the conference cellar, San Diego State took its first steps back to respectability.

Now in Year 2, Hoke hopes to put his program in position to contend for one of the league's five bowl tie-ins. To do so, his defense must get more stops and his offense must take care of the ball and play smart.

"I think we're going to be a more athletic team," Hoke says. "I think we're a better football team than we were this time a year ago."

The Aztecs are better because the players in the program are more comfortable with Hoke and his coaching staff and vice versa. Quarterback Ryan Lindley should continue to make progress in his junior season now that he has a year of playing for Hoke under his belt. Lindley passed for 3,054 yards and 23 touchdowns as a sophomore while averaging 254.5 yards per game through the air, second best in the Mountain West.

Lindley's favorite target, DeMarco Sampson, is back along with senior Vincent Brown and sophomore Dominique Sandifer. Sampson led the team with 62 receptions and scored eight touchdowns in 2009, while Sandifer had 26 grabs and a pair of TDs.

The Aztecs still need to develop a running game. They finished last in the rushing department in the MWC last year, but if sophomore Walter Kazee and freshman Ronnie Hillman can make any impact, SDSU will move up in the conference standings.

Hoke is confident his defense will improve. That side of the ball was a point of emphasis during the spring.

After five years of losing football, Mike Sanford was sent packing and Bobby Hauck was brought in from Montana to help get the Rebels to the next step—a bowl game.

It might be a baby step this year given the team's schedule. Nonconference games against Wisconsin, West Virginia, Nevada, Idaho and Hawaii will test Hauck's patience and UNLV's depth.

However, there is talent to work with. Eight starters return on each side of the ball, and UNLV's secondary of Quinton Pointer, Travis Dixon, Deante' Purvis and Alex De Giacomo is one of the better units in the league.

Linebackers Starr Fuimaono and Ronnie Paulo are potential all-conference players and defensive linemen Malo Taumua and Isaako Aaitui play the run well.

Omar Clayton has had some bright moments at quarterback, but he will be in a battle with Mike Clausen and Caleb Herring to be the starter this season. Nothing was settled at spring practice, as the competition among the three was close.

Whoever wins the job will get to throw to Michael Johnson and Philip Payne, two talented receivers who run good routes and can get all-important yards after the catch. Senior Channing Trotter, the Rebels' 5-8 running back, is elusive and Hauck figures to use him as both a runner and a receiver.

Senior center John Gianninoto is underrated and will anchor a decent offensive line. The Rebels were able to move the ball under Sanford between the 20s. Now, Hauck's task is to get his team to finish drives while having the defense do a better job of stopping opponents from finishing theirs.

Tailbacks will now carry the MAC mantle

By Rodney McKissic, Buffalo News

The Mid-American Conference has a strong history of producing high-caliber quarterbacks and you can now add Central Michigan's Dan LeFevour and Western Michigan's Tim Hiller to that list.

Now that LeFevour and Hiller have taken their record-setting talents to the next level, the question now is, who's next? While there are several candidates on tap (Miami's Zac Dysert, Akron's Patrick Nicely), this is the first time in recent memory that nearly every team in the league has major questions at quarterback.

The focus is now a tailback crop led by Temple's Bernard Pierce, who made a stunning college debut for the Owls. Northern Illinois' Chad Spann, Ball State's MiQuale Lewis (who was granted a fifth year of eligibility) and Kent State's Eugene Jarvis (given a sixth season by the NCAA) round out a rushing group that could stack up with any BCS conference.

History also indicates the team with the best quarterback has the inside track on the conference title, but that could change this time around.

Temple, winners of nine games last season and a bowl appearance, is strong defensively and figures to play a major role in deciding the East. Last year, expectations were low at Ohio but the Bobcats ended up winning the division title. The Bobcats should make the division race interesting if senior quarterback Boo Jackson recovers from a torn labrum. Bowling Green and Kent State have a chance to move into the top spot, while new coach Jeff Quinn tries to help Buffalo rebound from a disappointing season. New coach Rob Ianello will try to do the same at Akron, while second-year coach Mike Haywood continues the rebuilding project at tradition-rich Miami (Ohio).

Now that LeFevour and coach Butch Jones (the new Cincinnati coach) have moved on, the West Division is more balanced than it has been in recent years. With multitalented quarterback Chandler Harnish, coach Jerry Kill's Northern Illinois club showed tremendous promise last season and notched a victory over Purdue. Toledo and Western Michigan have to address defensive woes, while Ball State and Eastern Michigan are looking to continue their upward mobility in the West.

RECRUITING ROUNDUP By Jeremy Crabtree, Rivals.com

1. TOLEDO The Rockets landed the best class in the league, highlighted by four-star receiver James Green.
2. TEMPLE The Owls landed a solid group led by talented DT Dante Weaver.
3. KENT STATE Jerome Davis is one of the best defensive players from Georgia.
4. NORTHERN ILLINOIS Watch out for RB Jasmin Hopkins from Fort Scott CC.
5. AKRON Rob Ianello helped rally Akron's class to the upper half of the conference.
6. WESTERN MICHIGAN Raheem Buxton and Tevin Drake are talented players from the Sunshine State.
7. MIAMI (OHIO) DeMarco Paine is a three-star recruit, while Orne Bey is one of the top defensive playmakers in Pennsylvania.
8. BOWLING GREEN Bowling Green's class featured five three-star recruits.
9. BALL STATE Three-star recruits such as Quintin Cooper, Brian Jones and Tory Squires could develop into talented players.
10. CENTRAL MICHIGAN Defensive end Kevin Henry is a big steal and talented enough to play in the Big Ten.
11. BUFFALO A coaching change put the recruiting class in transition, but Okoye Houston and James Potts look like impact players.
12. EASTERN MICHIGAN Eastern's class has 24 players, including two three-star recruits.
13. OHIO Frank Solich recruits kids who play his style of hard-nosed football, and that's what is in this group.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

RATING THE RECRUITS

1 Dante Weaver DT, 6-2, 320 Weaver is stout against the run and will be a lane-clogger. The No. 11 prospect in New Jersey, he could play early.	2 Myron Ross RB, 6-1, 205 Ross is a one-time Vanderbilt commitment who could turn out to be the biggest sleeper coming out of Pennsylvania.	3 Antonio Belt WR, 6-0, 170 Belt, who had an offer from Maryland, is versatile and could be either a wide receiver or defensive back for the Owls.	4 Tyler Johnson TE, 6-7, 240 Johnson is raw, but also one of the best-looking prospects in the country physically. He could play tight end or defensive end.	5 Deon Miller WR, 6-6, 200 Miller is college-ready after spending a prep year at Fork Union Military Academy in Virginia. He's a pure possession receiver.
---	---	--	--	--

Finally, after so many substandard and underachieving seasons, Temple managed a breakthrough in 2009, completing the program's most triumphant season in 30 years. The Owls went 9-4 last fall in a season that ended with them losing to UCLA 30-21 in the EagleBank Bowl. Temple, which was once kicked out of the Big East because of the conference's perception that it lacked a commitment to football, is relevant again, and coach Al Golden intends to keep it that way.

He has the returning talent to do just that. The bulk of last year's roster is back and Golden, an outstanding recruiter, has built the depth considerably since taking over the downtrodden program in 2006.

Not only did the Owls enjoy their first winning season in 19 years, they also earned a share of the MAC East Division title with a 7-1 mark, and put together a nine-game winning streak that established a school record for a single season. With 17 starters and 56 lettermen returning—along with 26 others coming off their redshirt seasons—Golden's squad will be a lead-in contender for the MAC championship this fall.

Among the nine starters back on offense is tailback Bernard Pierce, who was named MAC Freshman of the Year after setting the school's freshman record for rushing yards with 1,361 and single-season school records for touchdowns (16) and points (96). A shoulder injury limited him to eight starts during the regular season, but Pierce indicated that he was fine during the spring.

The Owls return nine of their top 10 offensive linemen, including a pair of first-team All-MAC selections in guard Colin Madison and tackle Darius Morris. They will line up in front of either redshirt senior Vaughn Charlton or redshirt junior Chester Stewart, who split the quarterbacking duties last season. Stewart (514 yards, 3 TDs, 3 INTs) started the last four games of the regular season. Charlton (1,390, 10, 11) moved back into the lineup in the postseason.

To help balance the offense and perhaps take some of the pressure off the quarterback, Golden signed highly touted junior college receiver Darryl Shine, a burner who was also sought by Utah, Wyoming and Hawaii.

While Pierce took up the bulk of the publicity last season, Temple's foundation was its physical play on defense. The fact that the Owls won nine games with a shaky quarterback situation was testament to that. Seven starters return from that group, including end Adrian Robinson, who was named MAC Defensive Player of the Year after leading the conference with 13 sacks.

THE NEXT BIG THING NATE SMITH, LB

Al Golden calls Smith "the best pure football player" of his recruiting class, so chances are he'll find his way on the field eventually.

He was joined on the all-league first team by safety Jaiquawn Jarrett, tackle Muhammad Wilkerson and linebacker Elijah Joseph.

2 BOWLING GREEN FALCONS

Bowling Green is so young this season that second-year coach Dave Clawson might have to institute a naptime during training camp.

Out of 85 scholarship players, 44 have four years remaining, so Clawson will certainly miss wide receiver Freddie Barnes and quarterback Tyler Sheehan, who helped turn the underachieving Falcons into a Humanitarian Bowl team in 2009. Sheehan and Barnes are only two of 16 starters Clawson will need to replace because of graduation.

Tailback Willie Geter and offensive linemen Ben Bojicic and Tyler Donahue make up the returning offensive regulars, while defensive back Adrien Spencer and linemen Chris Jones, Angelo Magnone and Kevin Alvarado are the experienced starters back on defense.

Geter is the top returning offensive threat after rushing for 705 yards on 176 carries (9 TDs) in 2009.

Aaron Pankratz, Matt Schilz, Kellen Pagel and Caleb Watkins are the four quarterbacks in training camp competing for the spot left vacant by Sheehan, who was a three-year starter. Clawson says the job won't be decided until just before the Falcons' first game.

The competition at wide receiver also promises to be highly competitive this fall. Calvin Wiley and Tyrone Pronty, both fifth-year seniors, lead a deep and talented group that also includes Ray Hutson, Justice Jones, Adrian Hodges, Kamar Jorden and Jordan Hopgood.

3 OHIO BOBCATS

The Bobcats' giddy run to the East Division championship last year was an unlikely one, but an encore is expected this time around.

The core of the team returns for Ohio coach Frank Solich, who merely has to retool a few positions. If he's successful, matching last season's 9-5 mark is more than a realistic objective.

Dual-threat quarterback Theo Scott is gone, but senior Boo Jackson, who missed most of last season with a torn labrum, is more than a capable replacement.

When you consider that Solich is a disciple of Nebraska coaching legend Tom Osborne, it was surprising that the Bobcats had difficulty running the football in 2009. Ohio was 11th in the MAC in rushing and 10th in total offense—and leading rusher Chris Garrett is gone. Vince Davidson, Donte Harden and L.J. Flintall return, but they combined for only 581 yards last season.

The offensive line's leader, center David White, graduated, but five of the top seven linemen from last season return. The Bobcats must also replace receiver Taylor Price, who led the team with 56 receptions. But Ohio has plenty of depth on hand, as Lavon Brazil, Terrence McCrae, Steven Goulet and Riley Dunlop are all experienced.

The defense, led by linebacker Noah Keller, has its front four back intact. Linebackers Lee Renfro and Eric Ejike and cornerback Thad Turner have to be replaced, however.

4 KENT STATE GOLDEN FLASHES

If not for some key injuries—the loss of tailback Eugene Jarvis was the most distressing—Kent State would have challenged for the East Division crown in 2009. But the Golden Flashes received some good news when Jarvis was granted a sixth year of eligibility after missing all but one game last season. Jarvis ranks fourth on Kent State's career rushing list with 3,426 yards, including a school single-season record of 1,669 yards in 2007, and is one of the best tailbacks in the league.

The return of Jarvis has expectations soaring, as the Flashes also return seven starters on defense, including linebacker Cobrani Mixon, who recorded 108 tackles and three sacks in '09 for a defense that allowed just 22.4 points per game.

If quarterback Spencer Keith is healthy after offseason shoulder surgery, then Kent State should be able to score points in bunches. The return of Jarvis, a formidable defense and depth at each position place pressure on coach Doug Martin and his staff. It's time for a breakthrough at Kent, or Martin runs the risk of looking for a new job by late December.

5 BUFFALO BULLS

An era filled with wisps of joy and sadness ended when Turner Gill left Buffalo for Kansas. In just four seasons, Gill took the program from laughingstock to conference championship contender, so new coach Jeff Quinn has huge shoes to fill.

The Quinn era got off to a rocky start when starting quarterback Zach Maynard announced he was transferring to California, thus leaving the team with no experience under center. After playing second string last season, Jerry Davis begins the fall as the leading candidate to be the new signal-caller. Strong safety Davonte Shannon will be the leader of the defense.

Quinn will utilize a spread offense similar to the one he used as offensive coordinator under Brian Kelly at Cincinnati, and the Bulls are shifting to a no-huddle attack. The spread was part of Gill's multiple-offensive package the last four seasons, which should help some with the transition.

Quinn could, nevertheless, elect to run more often than pass-happy Cincinnati did last season because of the Bulls' depth at tailback. Quinn's motto of "Next Bull In" could be "Which Bull In?" in terms of his tailbacks. Senior Brandon Thermilus, who battled an ankle injury last season, will get the first crack.

The primary issue on defense is adjusting to a multiple front with a 3-4 base, but it helps to return Shannon and cornerback Dominique Cook, a pair of four-year starters, as well as senior linebacker Justin Winters.

6 AKRON ZIPS

At least first-year coach Rob Ianello doesn't have to rebuild the program completely. The former Notre Dame assistant welcomes back 56 lettermen, including 17 starters from last year's 3-9 team.

A seemingly bottomless pool of tailbacks got deeper in January when Alex Allen was granted a sixth year of eligibility. The return of Allen gives the Zips five of their top six rushers back for 2010.

The Zips do lack experience at receiver after losing four of their top five wideouts from last year, but standout Jeremy LaFrance is among the returnees. Akron should benefit from the return of 11 of its top 15 tacklers and top two quarterbacks.

Keep an eye on sophomore Patrick Nicely, who could emerge as the next great quarterback from this conference. He'll be pushed by Matt Rodgers, who suffered a season-ending injury last year, paving the way for Nicely to emerge under center. The Zips have scrapped the spread offense and are shifting to a pro-style attack and there are adjustments on defense from a 3-3-5 to a more traditional 4-3 defense.

A defensive line led by James Harvey, Hasan Hazmine and Almondo Sewell is one of the strengths of the team, but the Zips must improve their sack total after registering a paltry 11 in 2009.

Sophomore middle linebacker Brian Wagner is set to become a big-time player after recording a team-high 132 tackles in his freshman season.

7 MIAMI (OHIO) REDHAWKS

Mike Haywood will be watched closely in his second season in Oxford because his first as coach was rather unremarkable. The RedHawks were a wretched 1-11 last season and just 1-7 in the MAC. Fans want to see improvement quickly.

It helps that the RedHawks have more starters returning than anyone in the conference. There are 80 returnees and 51 lettermen back, so spring practice and training camp should be very competitive.

Haywood was forced to play younger players immediately, so the RedHawks' overall record wasn't surprising last year, but the hope is that they learned enough to help the program turn the corner. At least Miami has a major building block in sophomore quarterback Zac Dysert, who returns after playing in 11 games a year ago and passing for more than 2,600 yards. Dysert made great progress last season, and a similar leap will give this offense a much-needed confidence boost.

Senior tailback Thomas Merriweather, who ran the ball 23 times for 106 yards and a touchdown in the team's spring game, made significant strides during the offseason and could surprise.

The defense will be led by linebacker Jerrell Wedge and defensive back Anthony Kokal, the RedHawks' leading tackler in 2009. They should be the primary components of an improved unit.

Hayward expects several newcomers to contribute early, including three transfers: fullback Vince Helmuth (Michigan), linebacker C.J. Marck (Connecticut) and defensive end Jason Semmes (Iowa).

5-YEAR WINS TREND

The Jerry Kill era at Northern Illinois is looking more and more promising. Kill has led the Huskies to back-to-back bowl games, and his team is one of the favorites to win the league this year.

Now, the next step is reaching the heights of the Joe Novak era, which included national rankings and multiple NIU players in the NFL. There are still some in DeKalb who aren't convinced Kill and the Huskies can take that next step.

Despite beating Purdue last season, critics have noted that the Huskies have yet to beat a winning team or compete for the MAC West Division championship.

"Sometimes we didn't concentrate very well and we weren't very consistent last year," Kill says. "After the work the players have put in over the offseason, we are better than we were at the end of (last) season."

Before spring practice started, the Huskies were dealt two key blows when defensive end Jake Coffman decided not to return and tailback Me'co Brown withdrew from school for personal reasons. In two seasons, Brown rushed for 1,155 yards and started 14 games.

Still, expectations are high at Northern Illinois. There are more than enough weapons on offense to win and, with Central Michigan moving on without Dan LeFevour, the target is squarely on Northern Illinois in the MAC West.

Eight starters return on offense, including potent tailback Chad Spann and quarterback Chandler Harnish, while nine starters are back on defense.

Harnish, who has started 17 games at quarterback over the last two seasons, did not participate in spring practices while recuperating from knee surgery. If things go badly with his recovery, redshirt junior DeMarcus Grady, who started five games and has seen action in 14 contests over the last two seasons, will be on deck, with redshirt freshmen Jordan Lynch and A.J. Hill waiting in the wings.

Spann and standout defensive tackle D.J. Pirkle, who had shoulder surgery in January, also missed spring practice but should be ready by the fall.

"I'm not worried about seeing what Chad or D.J. can do," Kill says. "We know what they are capable of."

The Huskies lost eight starters—seven on offense and defense and kicker Mike Salerno—off of last year's squad and return 18 players, including 10 defenders, who have started at least seven games over the last two seasons. For the second straight season, Northern Illinois finished No. 1 in total defense among MAC schools in 2009.

The schedule isn't kind. Northern will play four of its first five games away and close the regular season with back-to-back road contests.

THE NEXT BIG THING CAMERON STINGILY, LB

At 6-2 and 240 pounds, Stingily has good size and the speed to eventually move into the starting lineup this season as a true freshman.

2 CENTRAL MICHIGAN CHIPPEWAS

First-year coach Dan Enos has some big shoes to fill. Butch Jones replaced Brian Kelly and the tradition of winning conference championships and earning bowl bids didn't stop. Now it's Enos' turn to see if he can keep the program purring.

Enos and Central Michigan must carry on without Dan LeFevour, the best player in school history and one of the best quarterbacks to ever play in the MAC. Junior Derek Rifenburg, sophomore Ryan Radcliff and redshirt freshman A.J. Westendorp are the three returning quarterbacks on the Chippewas' roster, but only Radcliff has attempted a pass. He was 10-for-21 for 115 yards and two interceptions (and a rushing TD) in a backup role in 2009.

The Chippewas won't have the same firepower on offense this year after losing LeFevour, wide receiver/returner Antonio Brown and wide receiver Bryan Anderson, but Enos hopes his squad becomes more balanced.

Defense will be the Chippewas' strength. The unit returns two of the top linebackers in the MAC in seniors Nick Bellore and Matt Berning.

Bellore enters 2010 with 382 career tackles, seventh most in school history. He's 108 tackles shy of Brian Leigeb's school record of 490. Bellore has made at least 100 tackles in each of his first three seasons.

Berning made a career-high 108 tackles in 2009. He ranked second on the team in total tackles and third in tackles for loss (8.5). Because of CMU's speed on the edges, Enos plans to implement more blitz packages.

If Enos finds an answer for LeFevour, there's enough weapons to go around to keep the things rolling in Mount Pleasant.

3 TOLEDO ROCKETS

The foundation of Tim Beckman's program at Toledo will be built on defense, and Beckman, a longtime defensive coordinator at Bowling Green and Oklahoma State, devoted his attention to that unit during the offseason.

Toledo lost five defensive starters from 2009, including four-time All-MAC safety Barry Church. But 23 lettermen return on defense, including three in the secondary who started as true freshmen.

Beckman has focused intently on the defensive line, where the Toledo was weak last season. The Rockets redshirted five defensive linemen who are expected to play immediately, giving the team six candidates at tackle and seven at end. Senior Alex Johnson and sophomore T.J. Fatinikun are the best candidates at end.

Toledo also has to find a new quarterback. Aaron Opelt took the bulk of the snaps the last four seasons, so there wasn't a lot of experience gained backing him up. Sophomore Austin Dantin is the likely leader in the competition, but junior Alex Pettee and sophomore David Pasquale will make things interesting during training camp.

Of all the issues on Beckman's to-do list, offensive line isn't one of them. The Rockets return four players up front who started all 12 games in 2009, including junior standout center Kevin Kowalski.

Wide receiver Steven Williams has graduated, leaving a huge void. Do-everything wideout Eric Page assumes the lead role, but junior Kenny Stafford, sophomore Julian Bellinger and junior Tim Cortazzo are all capable playmakers.

4 WESTERN MICHIGAN BRONCOS

There were few worries offensively when Tim Hiller was under center, but now he's gone so nearly everyone at Western Michigan is a bit panicky.

Drew Burdi, a fifth-year senior, and Alex Carder, a red-shirt freshman, are dual-threat quarterbacks and the top candidates to replace him. Carder was the backup last season, while Burdi was No. 3. Redshirt freshman Tyler VanTubergen has a big arm, but he has yet to take a collegiate snap.

Burdi was in a competition with Hiller and Thomas Peregrin in 2007, and penciled in as a starter for a while, but his play was uneven and he eventually lost out to Hiller.

Whoever wins the job should be well protected by right tackle Dann O'Neil, a transfer from Michigan. The defense took a step back last season and the recruiting efforts focused on linemen and the secondary.

Coach Bill Cubit also shook up his defensive coaching staff, letting coordinator Steve Morrison go and bringing in former Hofstra head coach Dave Cohen to replace him.

The defensive line also needs help, so they turned to John Rice, a junior college transfer who's the nephew of NFL Hall of Famer Jerry Rice. He and freshman Travonte Boles are expected to provide great help on the interior.

There's some experience at tailback with Aaron Winchester. He'll get a chance to win the starting job now that Brandon West is gone.

5 BALL STATE CARDINALS

A year after finishing the regular season unbeaten, Ball State slipped to 2-10 in 2009, one of the worst seasons in school history.

To second-year coach Stan Parrish, it comes down to playing with more consistency. The passing game was atrocious for much of the season, forcing the Cardinals to pound the ball at opponents on the ground. The strong running game remains intact and, along with Buffalo, Ball State has arguably the deepest tailback collection in the league.

Senior MiQuale Lewis, who was granted a fifth season of eligibility to accommodate for time lost due to an injury in 2007, is the most experienced player in the backfield. He holds school records for rushing yards in a season (1,736) and game (301), and needs 666 yards in 2010 to become the 13th player in league history to rush for 4,000 career yards.

The biggest question mark coming into the season is at quarterback. Will the Cardinals go with Kelly Page, who started seven games last year before being injured, or redshirt freshman Aaron Mershman? And don't forget about true freshman Keith Wenning, who comes in with impressive credentials.

The Cardinals' linebackers are the key to the team's success on defense. Davyd Jones led Ball State in tackles (100) last year and middle linebacker Travis Freeman was second with 93. Free safety Sean Baker is a superb playmaker.

When Ron English took over last season, there was talk of changing the program's forlorn culture, but he also warned that the process would take time.

Still, no one envisioned an 0-12 debut. This time around, the players should be more comfortable in English's system.

They have an exciting player behind center in sophomore Alex Gillett, who was pressed into service as a true freshman when an injury ended the career of Andy Schmitt. A threat to create plays with his arm and his legs, Gillett's competition in training camp will be redshirt freshman Devonte Payne, who offers more athleticism.

The defensive line may be one of the deepest areas on the team, with seven lettermen returning. Junior defensive end Javon Reese was second on the team in tackles for loss with nine last year, while run-stuffing senior tackle Ryan Leonard was third in that department with 7.5.

Junior tackle Brandon Slater had 31 tackles while junior end Brad Ohrman recorded 19 stops. Andy Mulumba saw action at linebacker as a true freshman in 2009 but was moved to defensive end during the spring.

The linebacking corps will be manned by a seven-player committee led by seniors Tim Fort, Neal Howey and Nate Paopao. It will be difficult to replace graduated Andre Hatchett, who led the team in tackles last year with 113 at his linebacker spot.

After offseason of discontent, questions abound at the top

By Jon Wilner, San Jose (Calif.) Mercury News

There was a lot of offseason turmoil in the Pac-10, yet the path to the league championship is ready for the taking. But who will step up?

With Oregon quarterback Jeremiah Masoli suspended for the season, USC probably would have been the favorite, but only if Pete Carroll had stuck around. And Lane Kiffin is so full of surprises, it's hard to tell how he will handle the assignment.

On the other hand, Carroll has left for the NFL, making Oregon the favorite ... if Masoli were around to operate the spread option. The Ducks have replacements, but are they up to the challenge?

Without Carroll and Masoli, the race is wide open, as a handful of teams possess realistic designs on the title.

That group includes defending champion Oregon and USC, which has won seven of the past eight titles. But the front door is also open for Oregon State, Arizona and Washington.

With its spotty defense, Washington would seem to have no chance—except it boasts quarterback Jake Locker, the best player in the league at the most important position.

Arizona also has issues defensively but welcomes 10 starters back on its high-powered offense. USC has the most talented roster despite questions at numerous positions and on the sideline.

Stanford seemingly has everything needed for a run at the title, so long as it finds a steady ground game. Oregon State's in great shape everywhere but QB, just like its archrival in Eugene.

That's what makes the race so difficult to project: The teams with the best combination of talent and experience are the teams with the biggest unknowns at quarterback.

Only one team in the past 15 years has won the conference title with a first-time starter at quarterback, and that team (USC in 2003) had Reggie Bush and LenDale White in the backfield helping a rookie signal-caller named Matt Leinart.

Not since 2000—before USC's rise under Carroll—has there been a three-team tie at the top of the standings. But because of Carroll's departure and Masoli's downfall, we could see it again in 2010.

RECRUITING ROUNDUP By Adam Gorney, Rivals.com

1. USC The nation's best class is headlined by five five-star prospects—including the nation's second-best player in offensive tackle Seantrel Henderson.

2. UCLA Landing five-star defensive end Owamagbe Odighizuwa on signing day was a big finish in a solid class.

3. CAL The Golden Bears' group is led by five-star defensive end Chris Martin and five-star defensive back Keenan Allen.

4. OREGON The Ducks signed highly touted Texas recruit Lache Seastrunk, while landing four-star defensive tackle Ricky Heimuli was a big surprise.

5. STANFORD Defensive end Blake Lueders switched from Notre Dame, and QB Brett

Nottingham is a former UCLA commit.

6. WASHINGTON Four four-star prospects from California signed with the Huskies, including defensive back Sean Parker.

7. ARIZONA STATE Massive offensive lineman Brice Schwab decommitted from USC after Pete Carroll left for Seattle.

8. ARIZONA The Wildcats went the junior college route for two of their top prospects: LB Derek Earls and DT Willie Mobley.

9. OREGON STATE Quarterback Sean Mannion, LB Shaydon Akuna and DT Thomas Molesi, all four-star recruits, lead the group.

10. WASHINGTON STATE The Cougars signed five wideouts as they look to rebuild a stagnant offense.

1 Coach Lane Kiffin of USC will offend at least one opposing team (or coach) with a critical or sarcastic comment. The betting favorite: UCLA. And, yes, coach Rick Neuheisel will gladly take the bait.

2 This will be quarterback Andrew Luck's final season at Stanford. The redshirt sophomore will be draft-eligible next spring and a lock to go in the top 10.

3 No team will finish the season ranked in the top 10 of the Associated Press poll. There's too much parity, and the nonconference schedules are too tough.

4 Washington State will win a conference game. The Cougars have done it only once in the past two seasons—and that was against winless Washington in 2008.

ASCENDING

WASHINGTON » The Huskies won five games last year and should top that total this season with one of the most dynamic offenses in the conference. If the defense solidifies early, they could win as many as eight games.

DESCENDING

CAL » Once considered the league's No. 2 program behind USC, the Bears will be hard-pressed to match last year's eight wins with a wobbly passing game and concerns throughout the defense.

1 OREGON DUCKS

25

MATTHEWS, LB

That's right. Despite everything, the pick is Oregon, which should indicate how much talent the Ducks have—and just how big a favorite they would have been with Jeremiah Masoli under center.

They would have been prohibitive favorites the way USC was the prohibitive favorite for so many years.

They would have been a top five team nationally, a contender for the BCS title and the possessor of one of the most lethal offenses in the land.

Instead, after the winter of their malcontent, the Ducks have a narrow advantage (on paper) over their closest competitors. They're in that murky realm where a handful of plays could be the difference between first place and fourth.

The two questions that hover above everything are whether the new quarterbacks are capable of running the spread option effectively, and what impact the offseason tumult will have on the Ducks' focus and preparation.

Let's take the second question first.

Many coaches believe championships are won from January through July, when chemistry, leadership and conditioning are established. Given the embarrassing series of arrests, suspensions and court appearances, it is difficult to imagine the Ducks made the most of their winter.

BULLET POINTS

- What toll, if any, did the offseason problems take on Oregon's preparation?
- Either Darron Thomas or Nate Costa must provide stability at quarterback.
- The defense should be one of the league's best, especially at linebacker.

GAME TO WATCH

D.4 @ OREGON STATE 37-33

The Civil War has become the biggest game in the Pac-10. The 2010 version should be no different, with plenty at stake for both teams.

BOWL PROJECTION

ROSE BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING KENJON BARNER, RB

The sophomore (366 rushing yards in '09) has the potential to be this year's LaMichael James, a second-string running back who's as good as the starter.

But the Ducks' offseason shenanigans only matter if the quarterback replacements are busts. If either Nate Costa or Darron Thomas is capable of running the offense effectively, then Oregon could roll to the league title despite the winter mayhem.

If neither quarterback is up to the necessary standard, then the impact of the offseason distractions gets magnified and a mediocre season could result.

It's not like the Ducks get a break in their schedule. They play at Tennessee in Week 2 and pay a visit to Berkeley later in the season, where they haven't won since 2001. Oregon must also play its chief rivals—USC and Oregon State—on the road in order to win the Pac-10.

Despite a schedule that carries such a limited margin for error and so many challenges for the new quarterbacks, the guess here is that Costa and Thomas are productive enough to keep the Ducks on top.

A committee of Costa and Thomas makes the most sense, as it is unlikely that one of them will replace Masoli and hold the job for three months.

And don't be surprised if coach Chip Kelly uses a rotation throughout the season. Costa, a senior coming off multiple knee injuries, is more experienced and a more precise passer. But Thomas is a superb athlete who will thrive in the spread option once he learns the nuances.

For both quarterbacks, the keys will be avoiding mistakes and distributing the ball to Oregon's sensational array of playmakers.

Topping the list is sophomore tailback LaMichael James, who was born for the spread and rushed for 1,546 yards last season despite limited opportunity early. Behind James is the gifted Kenjon Barner, who averaged a slick six yards per carry in '09.

The aerial attack won't have the services of tight end Ed Dickson (42 catches), but starting receivers D.J. Davis, Jeff Maehl and Lavasier Tuinei are back. They combined for 100 receptions last season.

The offensive line should be the league's finest with all five starters returning. Having James in the backfield doesn't hurt. But the experience of left tackle Bo Thran & Co. is the primary reason there's so much optimism among the Duck faithful, despite the lack of experience at quarterback.

If anything, Oregon has more proven playmakers on defense than it does on offense.

The core of the line is comprised of tackles Brandon Bair and Zac Clark and pass-rushing end Kenny Rowe, who led the conference with 11.5 sacks last season. The coaches are optimistic that either Terrell Turner or converted receiver Dion Jordan (6-7) will help offset the departure of end Will Tukuafu.

The Ducks are loaded at linebacker with Spencer Paysinger and Casey Matthews (162 combined tackles). In fact, the team is so loaded, it moved starter Eddie Pleasant to safety and reserve Brandon Hanna to defensive end. Either Bryson Littlejohn or Josh Kaddu will slide in for Pleasant.

All four starters are back in the secondary, plus Pleasant, meaning this should be one of the stingiest units in the conference. This group is more than capable of playing press coverage if defensive coordinator Nick Aliotti chooses that approach against the league's high-powered offenses.

There are questions in the kicking game, where Rob Beard is set to take over for Morgan Flint. Beard was involved in one of the offseason incidents and, like James, has been suspended for the first game.

RECRUITING REPORT

The Ducks made waves again nationally when they reeled in five-star running back Lache Seastrunk and landed Rivals 100 defensive tackle Ricky Heimuli on signing day. Landing Heimuli was one of the biggest surprises.

This Oregon class is full of other potential stars. Running back Dontae Williams, tight end Curtis White, athlete Keanon Lowe and offensive tackle Ryan Clanton are major recruits who rank as four-star players. The Ducks also have one of the best offensive line classes in the conference, led by Nick Rowland and Hroniss Grasu. Cornerback Dior Mathis from Detroit Cass Tech brings toughness.

2 OREGON STATE BEAVERS

JACQUIZZ RODGERS, RB

No team in the Pac-10 demolishes expectations like Oregon State. If the Beavers do it again this season, they'll end up in the Rose Bowl for the first time in 46 years.

Picked to finish sixth and fourth in the Pac-10 preseason polls the past two seasons, the Beavers instead tied for second both times.

This summer, Oregon State should be slotted no worse than second or third when the league's preseason poll is released in late July. To smash that lofty projection, the Beavers will have to finish on top.

And it's not difficult to envision the gritty little program from Corvallis overtaking its richer neighbor down the road (Oregon) or the conference kingpin (USC). All the Beavers need to become the favorite is decent quarterback play. Everything else is in place for a title run.

Oregon State returns 16 starters from a team that was four points away (a season-ending 37-33 loss to Oregon) from the Rose Bowl in 2009. Among the 16 are the Rodgers brothers: receiver James and tailback Jacquizz, who combined for 4,290 yards last season.

The Beavers also return the best head coach in the conference in Mike Riley, who spurned USC's overtures when Pete Carroll left for the NFL, as well as defensive mastermind Mark Banker and offensive coordinator Danny Langsdorf.

BULLET POINTS

- The Rodgers brothers, James and Jacquizz, are back to cause more havoc.
- Sophomore Ryan Katz is the favorite to win the starting quarterback job.
- Success defensively depends largely on the rebuilt linebacking unit.

BOWL PROJECTION

HOLIDAY BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING GABE MILLER, DE

The Beavers believe this senior who had three sacks last year is ready for a breakout season, thanks in part to playing alongside standout Stephen Paea.

All they need is someone to step in for the graduated Sean Canfield at quarterback. Granted, that's a tall order, as Canfield was one of the best in the conference last season, and the contenders for the job are short on experience.

Sophomore Ryan Katz threw 27 passes last season. And junior transfer Peter Lalich has two starts on his résumé, but both were at Virginia. Redshirt freshmen Cody Vaz and Jack Lomax are also in the mix.

"Whenever there's a changing of the guard at quarterback, that's big news and a big issue," Riley says. "I like the talent and we'll see who emerges."

Whoever it is won't have to carry the offense. There are so many talented and experienced pieces that the quarterback's only mission will be to avoid losing games.

One option is to hand the ball to "Quizz," the 5-7 dynamo who has 2,693 career yards and is on pace to finish as the league's No. 2 all-time rusher behind Charles White. Yet the Beavers would prefer to ease Rodgers' workload this season, which can only be done if reserve Ryan McCants stays healthy or Jovan Stevenson grows into his raw talent.

Another option for the quarterback will be throwing to flanker James Rodgers, who led the Pac-10 with seven catches per game last year and is just as dangerous running the fly sweep. The other returning starters in the receiving department are halfback Joe Halahuni, wideout Darrell Catchings and tight end Brady Camp.

Whether the quarterback is Katz or Lalich (or one of the freshmen), he should have plenty of time to throw with an offensive line that returns four starters, including center Alex Linnenkohl, who has 26 consecutive starts. The only hole is at right guard, the spot previously occupied by all-conference performer Gregg Peat. Junior Burke Ellis and Colin Kelly are the front-runners.

Across the line of scrimmage, there is also one hole to fill, as defensive end Matt LaGrone quit the team in the spring for personal reasons. But the defensive line should be one of the finest in the Pac-10 because it has the most dominant defensive player in the league in senior Stephen Paea, who would have been a high-round NFL draft pick in April. Don't be fooled by Paea's modest sack total from 2009 (3); he's 311 pounds of solid muscle, with quick feet and a motor that never stops.

"He creates a lot of havoc with his strength that forces double teams and enables his teammates to make plays," Riley says.

The Beavers had the makings of a first-class linebacker unit, but then middleman David Pa'aluhii left school to join the military and Keith Pankey, the projected starter on the outside, ripped his Achilles. The Beavers believe Pankey will be ready for the season, but whether he returns to pre-injury form is uncertain. The front-runners to replace Pa'aluhii are Tony Wilson and Rueben Robinson.

Three starters return to a secondary that should be the best in the conference. Safeties Cameron Collins and Lance Mitchell are both 6-2, as is cornerback Brandon Hardin.

The special teams are also in good shape with punter Johnny Hekker and kicker Justin Kahut (22 field goals) expected to reclaim their jobs. And don't forget about the ubiquitous James Rodgers, who averaged 23.3 yards per kick return and 11.6 on punts a year ago.

RECRUITING REPORT

Oregon State wasn't going to win a lot of team-rankings races this season mainly because of its extremely small class. The Beavers were limited in quantity, but they more than made up for it with quality.

The Beavers made a considerable upgrade on their defensive line with Fred Thompson and Thomas Molesi. Oregon State has also had tremendous success with undersized running backs, and Malcolm Marable could be the next big thing in that regard. Landing linebacker Shaydon Akuna out of Hawaii was a nice pickup.

3 USC TROJANS

ALLEN
BRADFORD, RB

This year's USC team is not the same as its former self. While there's a little luster left over, the Trojans have as many questions as they do answers, starting with the man in charge and moving on down the line to the assistants, the quarterback and just about every unit.

There are even questions about the status of the program itself. At press time, USC was awaiting word from the NCAA Infractions Committee regarding any penalties that would be imposed from the Reggie Bush case, which was prompted by allegations that the former Trojan running back received cash and gifts during his time at the school.

Most likely, the Trojans will have to forfeit games, repay money and lose future scholarships. But a postseason ban for 2010 is possible as well, and that would alter USC's approach to the season, placing greater emphasis on each game with nothing to play for beyond the first Saturday in December.

And the man who must guide USC through the potential wreckage is 34-year-old Lane Kiffin, the former Pete Carroll assistant who spent just more than a year with the Oakland Raiders and one season at Tennessee before accepting the USC job in January.

He replaces his former boss, Carroll, who was the most successful football

BULLET POINTS

- Is Lane Kiffin up to the challenge of replacing his former boss, Pete Carroll?
- The defensive line is rock-solid, but there are concerns in the back seven.
- USC has the Pac-10's most talented roster, but the pieces must work together.

ALAMO BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING NICK PERRY, DE

Perry registered eight sacks in part-time duty last season and could develop into USC's next All-America lineman.

coach in Pac-10 history (7 league titles, 7 BCS wins and 7 top four finishes in 9 years).

Carroll's departure to the Seattle Seahawks rocked USC, which moved swiftly to maintain the Carroll-era feel by hiring Kiffin, who thrilled the Trojan fan base by bringing with him former USC assistant and recruiter extraordinaire Ed Orgeron. Kiffin also hired his father, Monte, one of the greatest defensive coordinators in NFL history. The younger Kiffin then flexed his recruiting muscle by locking up one of the nation's top recruiting classes.

It was business as usual at USC, save for the looming NCAA sanctions and the "oh-by-the-way" questions about whether Kiffin can actually coach.

We know his father, who created the famous Tampa 2 scheme, can plan a game as well as anybody in football, and he will do so with a first-rate defensive line.

While sack-master Everson Griffen departed for the NFL, the Trojans return both starting tackles in Christian Tupou and Jurrell Casey, plus two part-time starters at end in Wes Horton and Armond Armstead. And not to be overlooked is reserve Nick Perry, a 2009 Freshman All-American.

All three starters return at linebacker in Malcolm Smith, Chris Galippo and Michael Morgan, which might not be comforting to USC fans who watched the unit get burned repeatedly last season.

Officially, the secondary must replace four starters, including All-American Taylor Mays. But, in reality, USC returns its best cover corner in Shareece Wright, who would have started from Day 1 last season if he weren't academically ineligible. How the Trojans hold up at the other cornerback spot and both safety positions depends on whether players such as T.J. Bryant and Drew McAllister are as good as billed.

But the Trojans' success will rely on the offense and, specifically, on the development of quarterback Matt Barkley and his receivers.

Judging by his numbers, Barkley was mediocre last season (15 TDs, 14 INTs, 59.5-percent completion rate). For a true freshman, however, Barkley was nothing short of brilliant. Given natural progression, he should be the third-best quarterback in the conference behind Washington's Jake Locker and Stanford's Andrew Luck.

But for Barkley to flourish, the Trojans must not only find a replacement for all-everything receiver Damian Williams (70 catches) but also a second dependable option for Barkley. The contenders for those roles are Ronald Johnson, David Ausberry, Travon Patterson and Brice Butler. That quartet combined for 71 catches last season—just one more than Williams.

The same is true at tight end, where Anthony McCoy (22 catches) must be replaced. The Trojans have options in Rhett Ellison and Blake Ayles, but plenty of questions, too.

The two positions that appear to be in good shape are running back and offensive line, where three starters return but depth is a concern. In the backfield, Allen Bradford (668 rushing yards as a backup last year) is back to deliver more punishment on would-be tacklers. C.J. Gable returns for what seems like his seventh season. Also at Barkley's disposal is one of the most versatile fullbacks in the country in Stanley Havili.

RECRUITING REPORT

There was no bigger story during the final few weeks of the recruiting season—and again on signing day—than what was happening with USC. Coach Lane Kiffin did a tremendous job keeping together the pieces of a puzzle that was already assembled by former coach Pete Carroll. Keeping five-star recruits Kyle Prater, Dillon Baxter and Robert Woods on board was huge.

The Trojans also closed stronger than any program in the nation. The addition of five-star prospect Seantrel Henderson was crucial, especially once he delayed his decision until after signing day. Getting five-star wide receiver Markeith Ambles on board cannot be overlooked, either. He has the talent to make a difference early on.

4 WASHINGTON HUSKIES

JAKE LOCKER, QB

To assess Washington's prospects based solely on the quality of its quarterback is to declare the Huskies the Pac-10 favorite, for Jake Locker is as good as they come in college football.

And Locker is backed by some quality skill-position players. Their running backs and receivers—and even the offensive line—rate in the top half of the conference.

But to include Washington's defense in the assessment means lowering expectations significantly.

The Huskies will score, but will they stop anybody? As good as he is, Locker can't do much standing on the sideline.

But fans and media think he should, as Locker carries the burden of high expectations.

"If you had to ask me right now who is going to be the No. 1 pick in the 2011 draft," says ESPN analyst Mel Kiper, "I would say it's etched in stone it's going to be Jake Locker."

And how will UW hold up during a brutal seven-game stretch that starts with Nebraska, ends with Oregon and includes trips to USC and Arizona?

The answer will determine whether UW

BULLET POINTS

- Is this the year the Huskies finally end their postseason drought?
- Quarterback Jake Locker will be the league's top playmaker if he can stay healthy.
- If the defense is merely decent, UW should win more games than it loses.

BOWL PROJECTION

SUN BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING MASON FOSTER, LB

Foster started every game in 2009 but was overshadowed by Donald Butler. This year, Foster should be an all-conference candidate.

finishes fourth or eighth in the Pac-10 and whether it reaches the postseason for the first time since 2002 or endures its eighth straight year without a bowl bid.

One thing seems certain: The Huskies are on the rise under second-year coach Steve Sarkisian, the former USC lieutenant who has injected the proud UW program with energy and hope.

Following a winless 2008 season under Tyrone Willingham, the Huskies went 5-7 in Sarkisian's rookie season.

Whether that success comes in 2010 depends on a defense that ranked near the bottom in every major statistical category last year and lost its two best players in end Daniel Te'o-Nesheim and linebacker Donald Butler. The Huskies are so thin at the end position—Kalani Aldrich and Everette Thompson are injured; Andru Pulu was suspended following an arrest for assault—that they tried a freshman basketball player who hadn't stepped on the football field in five years.

But when Clarence Trent decided after a few spring workouts that he wanted to stick with basketball, the Huskies turned to tackle Cameron Elisara.

Fortunately for UW, the other units are in decent shape. Two starters return at linebacker, including senior Mason Foster, who forced six fumbles last season. But there's not much depth since the NCAA denied E.J. Savannah's appeal for an extra year of eligibility. Three starters also return in the secondary, where cornerbacks Desmond Trufant and Adam Long form a solid tandem.

But how will the defense hold up week after week against a barrage of high-powered offenses? If it cannot stop the other team—opponents converted 40 percent of their third downs last season—then Locker won't have many opportunities to show why he's considered the top quarterback talent in the country.

He won't have a chance to showcase his rocket arm, his improved accuracy or the mobility that makes him one of the best runners in the conference (only a handful of tailbacks are better than Locker in the open field).

And in contrast to the situation Locker encountered early in his career when he was a one-man offense, he'll have plenty of help from an array of talented skill players.

The first option at tailback is Chris Polk, who gained 1,113 yards as a freshman. A shoulder injury kept Polk from participating in spring practice, but he's expected to be ready for the season.

Meanwhile, Devin Aguilar and Jermaine Kearse form what might be the best wideout duo in the conference after combining for 92 catches and 13 touchdowns last year. Tight end Kavario Middleton is also a huge threat.

The offensive line should be more efficient and more physical than last year's version, which infamously failed to score from Notre Dame's one-yard line. The Huskies lost guard Ben Ossai, but everyone else of significance returns, which should mean decent protection for Locker and running lanes for Polk.

Washington is set in the kicking department with Erik Folk, who made 18 of 21 field goals and all 35 of his extra points last season. Punter Will Mahan is also back. Any improvement in the return game would provide better field position for the powerful offense, which would ease the burden for that fragile defense.

RECRUITING REPORT

The Huskies took major steps forward on the field last season, and their recruiting efforts reflected that. Coach Steve Sarkisian's aggressive tactics in California paid big dividends.

While it won't make any top-25 lists, this was a big rebound class full of talent. The Huskies went head-to-head with many other top programs in the Pac-10, and the results were promising. Getting four-star safety Sean Parker away from USC drew a lot of attention. Running back Deontae Cooper could be an immediate threat, and opening holes for him will be one of the best offensive line classes in the Pac-10.

A rematch of the double-overtime thriller in Tucson last year (won by Oregon) on the penultimate weekend of the season has the makings of must-watch football.

D.2 Arizona State 20-17

BOWL PROJECTION

LAS VEGAS BOWL

Arizona's success this season depends on which Wildcats team shows up: the dynamic, resilient version that came within a few plays of winning the conference, or the team that rolled over in the Holiday Bowl.

Without question, coach Mike Stoops' offense should be first-rate with 10 starters back and a full year of experience for quarterback Nick Foles. But the defense must replace seven starters, including both tackles and all three linebackers.

There is no telling how much impact the 33-0 Holiday Bowl loss to Nebraska will have on the Wildcats. Does it set the program back after two years of progress? Or does it serve as a motivator, pushing Arizona to continue its ascent?

Hopefully, it's the latter, especially since quarterbacks coach and play-caller Sonny Dykes is gone. Many thought his lack of technical knowledge hindered the development of the program's quarterbacks.

His successor, Frank Scelfo, will work with one of the league's finest signal-callers in Foles, who threw for 2,486 yards in 2009 despite a limited role in nonconference games. Once Foles stepped in last season, the Arizona offense took off, posting 33 points or more in five of nine conference contests.

Foles will have plenty of chances to distribute the ball. Tailbacks Keola Antolin, Nic Grigsby, Matt Scott and Greg Nwoko combined for 1,786 yards last year and make up a formidable backfield corps. Receivers Juron Criner, David Roberts, Delashaun Dean and David Douglas also return to help gain yardage. They combined for 161 receptions last year.

The offensive line looks experienced with four starters back, including center Colin Baxter, an all-conference candidate, and tackle Adam Grant, who received a sixth year of eligibility.

With that combination of talent, experience and depth—especially at the skill positions—the Wildcats should field one of the most potent offenses in the conference, if not the country.

But they might need to score 35 or 40 points to win in the Pac-10, given their issues defensively.

Brooks Reed and Ricky Elmore are both solid at defensive end. Elmore was second in the league in sacks (10.5) last year. Safety Robert Golden and cornerback Trevin Wade form a nice foundation for the secondary.

But so much of Arizona's success defensively depends on its new linebackers, two of which are junior college transfers: Derek Earls and Paul Vassallo. As mid-year transfers, they participated in spring practice and should be adjusted by the time the season opener arrives. The players to watch at tackle are juniors Jonathan Hollins and Dominique Austin.

THE NEXT BIG THING JURON CRINER, WR

Criner caught 45 passes last season but was just one of the pass-catching masses in Tucson. His big-play ability should translate to a breakout season.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

The Rick Neuheisel era at UCLA has not lived up to the hype, which may not be the coach's fault.

Combine the Neuheisel name with fans' desperation and a talent-depleted roster, and it's easy to see why too much might have been expected too soon.

But in Year 3, it's time for Neuheisel's energy, offensive coordinator Norm Chow's playbook and all those highly rated recruits to pay dividends for the Bruins.

Yes, UCLA finished 2009 with four wins in its last five games, which has generated some optimism in Westwood. But three of the wins were against sub-.500 teams.

There is reason to think progress is at hand. The offense, which ranked near the bottom of the conference in total yards, rushing and scoring, returns players with starting experience at nine of 11 positions.

"Most of our young players have now gained starting experience and are entering the third year of our system," Neuheisel says. "That experience, combined with their continuity in our system, leads us to believe we are ready to take a step forward offensively, especially in the area of the big play."

Quarterback Kevin Prince showed promise last season and should have a firm command of Chow's system this time around. The redshirt sophomore threw for 2,050 yards a year ago.

Tailback Johnathan Franklin won't be mistaken for Gaston Green or DeShaun Foster, but he's solid in the backfield. And receivers Nelson Rosario (6-5) and Taylor Embree (6-3) give Prince two big targets. The Bruins also return four starters along the offensive line, which should finally coalesce after several erratic seasons.

If the offense looks poised to take a lengthy stride forward, the defense could backslide. The Bruins lose six starters from a unit that finished third in the conference in points and yards allowed last year, including all-league tackle Brian Price and shutdown cornerback Alterraun Verner.

There's a solid foundation with defensive end Datone Jones, linebacker Akeem Ayers and safety Rahim Moore. But like Arizona and Washington, the unit's success depends on talented young reserves emerging as dependable starters. Tackle Nate Chandler, linebacker Steve Sloan and cornerback Aaron Hester will all have to acclimate quickly.

Another area of concern is the return game, where the Bruins no longer have the services of Terrence Austin. The kicking game, however, is set with the strong-legged combination of punter Jeff Locke and kicker Kai Forbath.

"I can't imagine that any school has a pair of kickers better than Kai and Jeff," Neuheisel says.

Given the questions everywhere else on the depth chart, he'd better hope not.

THE NEXT BIG THING NELSON ROSARIO, WR

Despite being limited by a young quarterback, Rosario averaged 17.2 yards per catch last year. This year, the 6-5 junior will be one of the league's best.

7 STANFORD CARDINAL

For the first time in a decade, Stanford enters a football season with expectations. They might not be USC-sized expectations, but they exist and are justified given Stanford's success last season.

But dealing with the increased pressure is nothing compared to filling the 1,800-yard hole in the Cardinal backfield.

Stanford won't begin to meet expectations if it cannot eliminate the void left by running back Toby Gerhart.

Not that one player can replace the Heisman Trophy runner-up, who rushed for 1,871 yards and scored 28 touchdowns last year. It will take a village. The top candidates are senior Jeremy Stewart and sophomores Stepfan Taylor and Tyler Gaffney. Together, they rushed for 1,374 fewer yards and scored 24 fewer TDs than Gerhart in 2009.

"I don't think we can replace him with one person. ... I'm hoping we can find some tandem that adds up to one Toby Gerhart," Cardinal coach Jim Harbaugh says.

If that happens, Stanford should once again have a potent offense. Andrew Luck is only a sophomore, but he's one of the best QBs in the country (2,575 yards, 13 TDs, 4 INTs last year).

Luck figures to be well protected behind a punishing offensive line that returns four starters. There are also a bevy of experienced tight ends, which is a crucial position in Stanford's physical running game.

If there's a question about the offense that does not involve Gerhart, it's at wide receiver. Ryan Whalen is a sure-handed, precise route-runner but not a breakaway threat. Chris Owusu has the speed to turn five-yard receptions into 75-yard touchdowns, but he's as likely to drop an important pass as corral it.

Whether it's Owusu or one of the gifted sophomores—Drew Terrell or Jamal-Rashad Patterson—someone must become a dependable big-play threat against opposing defenses.

And if Stanford cannot move the ball consistently, the defense will carry a greater share of the load. The Cardinal, who return six starters from a unit that ranked ninth in the conference, have a new coordinator in longtime NFL assistant Vic Fangio.

So desperate is Harbaugh to improve the defense that Owen Marecic, the best blocking fullback in the league, will spend a good portion of his time at inside linebacker. In addition to that move, backup QB Alex Loukas could move to safety and pass rusher Tom Keiser has been shifted to outside linebacker.

That's not to say the defense is devoid of talent. Tackles

Matt Masifilo and Sione Fua are strong and powerful. Weakside linebacker Shayne Skov is a rising star and strong safety Delano Howell is good enough to help the team win.

THE NEXT BIG THING SHAYNE SKOV, LB

The sophomore was third on the team in tackles last season and has the big-play speed you often see in athletes who line up for USC or California.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

For the first time in more than five years, California is projected to finish in the bottom half of the conference. And that projection is justified by the team's performance in the past few seasons.

Cal failed to meet expectations in 2009, but that was hardly the first instance.

The last four times the Bears have begun the season ranked in the Associated Press Top 25, they finished the campaign in a lower position than they started.

In 2007 and 2009, Cal was No. 12 in the preseason poll, climbed into the top 10 early in the season, then skidded down and out of the rankings by the end of the year.

Twice in the past three years, the team went from No. 12 nationally to unranked. In 2008, the Bears were unranked at the start and at the end.

What the Bears haven't done in the past five seasons is deliver an upside surprise. Granted, that's not easy when you're No. 12 in the preseason rankings. But this year provides plenty of room for the Bears to exceed expectations.

Still, they'll depend on the outcome of a long list of factors, starting with the play of senior quarterback Kevin Riley, who ranked sixth in the Pac-10 in efficiency and completed just 54.7 percent of his passes last season.

But the problems were not all Riley's making. His protection was spotty and the receivers made their share of mistakes—either with dropped passes, busted routes or a failure to get open against adequate defenses. And that, once again, is an issue. Other than Jeremy Ross and Marvin Jones (65 combined catches), the receiving corps is an inexperienced, unproven unit.

The running game is a concern as well, although not all hope is lost. Cal must replace dynamic playmaker Jahvid Best (6.1 yards per carry in 2009), but Best's understudy, Shane Vereen, proved himself worthy of more work when he rushed for 193 yards against Stanford last year.

The defense must replace its two best players—end Tyson Alualu and cornerback Syd'Quan Thompson—as well as longtime coordinator Bob Gregory, who bolted for an assistant position at Boise State.

Clancy Pendergast, Gregory's replacement, will make whatever adjustments are necessary to Cal's 3-4 defense in order to generate more pressure on the opposing quarterback. The dearth of a pass rush put Cal at No. 111 overall in pass defense last season.

And the scheme will fail if talented returnees such as end Cameron Jordan, linebacker Mike Mohamed and safety Sean Cattouse don't play at a high level on a consistent basis.

So, yes, there are more than enough concerns to justify Cal's low projected conference finish. The question is whether the Bears can prove their skeptics wrong.

THE NEXT BIG THING CAMERON JORDAN, DE

Jordan has all-conference size (6-4, 282 pounds), speed and ability. Look for him to play with consistent effort in his final season.

9 ARIZONA STATE SUN DEVILS

No team is better positioned to deliver a surprise upset than Arizona State—if only because so little is expected of the Sun Devils.

If the defense is as staunch as the Devils expect it to be—and if a handful of young skill-position players develop into consistent performers—ASU could challenge for fifth or sixth place in the conference. It wasn't that far away last season, losing three league games by five points or less.

But to get there, ASU will have to work a miracle. For the past two-plus seasons, the Devils have given no indication that they're ready to compete for a conference title.

The struggles date back to 2007, coach Dennis Erickson's first year in Tempe. The Devils won their first eight before skidding down the stretch after their scheduled stiffened. They stumbled again in '08 and then floundered last season because an anemic offense undermined an effective defense.

With the faithful in full grumble mode, Erickson's future could be in jeopardy if ASU turns in another losing season. And given the schedule, the uncertainty at quarterback and the pieces the Devils must replace on defense, a sub-.500 record is likely.

Few teams in the conference have a more rugged lineup of road games than ASU, which visits Wisconsin, Oregon State, USC, Washington and Arizona. Unless the Sun Devils find a way to win one of those five, they'll have to sweep the remaining seven to guarantee themselves a spot in the postseason.

The front-runner to take the first snap of the season is Michigan transfer Steven Threet. Unless it's 6-8 sophomore Brock Osweiler. Or junior Samson Szakacsy. Uncertainty at the most important position after back-to-back losing seasons is not an ideal situation for the Devils.

And it's not like the skill positions are stocked with proven playmakers. Erickson's top returning tailback is Cameron Marshall, who rushed for only 280 yards last season, while his top returning receiver is Gerell Robinson, who had just 26 receptions.

The Devils are in better shape up front, with a deep, veteran group that includes center Garth Gerhart (former Stanford star Toby's brother) and junior college transfer Brice Schwab.

Fortunately for the Sun Devils, the defense should be stout enough early on to give the offense time to come together. It has experience at every level, with five returning starters from a unit that ranked first in the Pac-10 against the run and pass in 2009.

The Devils' success starts in the middle with tackles Lawrence Guy and Saia Falahola and middle linebacker Vontaze Burfitt, the league's Defensive Freshman of the Year.

THE NEXT BIG THING GERELL ROBINSON, WR

Robinson (26 catches) was a heralded all-purpose recruit three years ago and finally gets his chance to be the No. 1 option in the passing game.

Add veteran Omar Bolden and a bevy of solid options at cornerback, and the defense should be good enough to once again give the Devils a chance to win some of their games.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

Washington State has been nothing short of atrocious the past two years, having been outscored 1,032-309.

Yep, the Cougars have been beaten by 723 points in two seasons, which has enabled Paul Wulff to slide onto the hot seat even though he's coaching at his alma mater in only his third season.

At times, Wulff, who was hired away from Eastern Washington, has looked overmatched. Then again, he's also looked like a competent coach with an overmatched roster.

But only twice in the two years under Wulff have the Cougars looked like they belong in the FBS: when they beat Washington at the end of 2008 and edged SMU at the start of '09.

Perhaps the most depressing news for State fans is that even if the Cougars are improved in 2010, they're still one of the worst teams in the conference.

As wide open as the top of the Pac-10 appears to be, the bottom is nearly sealed shut. It will be a stunning development if Washington State doesn't finish last.

And that's despite returning eight starters on offense, nine on defense and improving the overall speed and size of the roster.

The team also has a promising young quarterback in Jeff Tuel, who last year became the first true freshman to start at quarterback for the Cougars since Drew Bledsoe. Injuries limited Tuel to six games and just 121 attempts, and he'll compete with veteran Marshall Lobbestael for the starting job.

"Jeff showed flashes of what we thought he would be when we recruited him," Wulff says, "but he still has a lot of room to grow as a quarterback."

If James Montgomery, a Cal transfer, is fully recovered from the compartment syndrome injury he suffered early last year, he'll be the Cougars' top running back.

The offensive line must replace all-conference center Kenny Alfred. If the unit can give Tuel (or Lobbestael) time to throw, the aerial attack just might be respectable.

The Cougars return their top four receivers in Jared Karstetter, Gino Simone, Jeff Solomon and Daniel Blackledge, who combined for 122 catches last season.

"We really need to see a big jump from these guys for our offense to keep progressing," Wulff says.

The same could be said of the defense—every unit, every position, every player. The Cougars haven't stopped anyone in years and won't start this fall unless defensive end Travis Long gets some consistent support.

Casey Hamlett has shown potential at the other end, and Myron Beck could be a difference-maker at linebacker. The secondary is loaded with versatility, as Chima Nwachukwu is capable of playing either cornerback or safety.

THE NEXT BIG THING

JEFF TUEL, QB

The sophomore quarterback was one of the few bright spots last season and will become a solid passer if he stays healthy.

After months of debate about whether coach Urban Meyer can overcome stress and undisclosed medical issues to coach the Florida Gators long term, the most potent medicine could be delivered this fall.

Expectations will shrink, at least compared to last year's championship-or-bust outlook. The mounting pressures throughout the 2009 season boiled Meyer's stress level and prompted a short leave of absence during the offseason.

With Tim Tebow and plenty of leaders gone, Gator fans might accept the circumstances and embrace a lesser finish.

Yet Meyer handles losing as well as Tebow plays subtle. How will Florida respond if the Gators face a couple of ugly Saturdays in a row? Alabama and LSU are looming on the schedule for the first two weeks of October.

Meyer certainly hasn't lost his fire after publicly scolding a reporter during spring practices over the use of a quote by wide receiver Deonte Thompson calling Tebow's replacement John Brantley "a real quarterback."

Meyer got ripped by the national media for the incident, but his outburst might be proof that he's back after quitting on his team in late December.

For a group now relying on many of last year's backups at key positions, a fiery

SUGAR BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING JOHN BRANTLEY, QB

The Brantley era begins after three years of waiting behind Tim Tebow, and nobody doubts Brantley's arm strength. The former Gatorade National High School Player of the Year completed 36 of 48 passes for 410 yards with seven touchdowns and no interceptions as Tebow's backup in 2009.

leader from the sidelines is necessary.

Meyer's passion for his players is more predictable than whether the new-look Gators will show consistency in 2010.

Brantley, a redshirt junior, has the quarterback pedigree and a prototypical arm, but only poise will get his Gators out of Knoxville or Tuscaloosa with a win in 2010.

Florida loses six defensive starters, including linebacker Brandon Spikes, defensive end Carlos Dunlap and cornerback Joe Haden.

Wideout Riley Cooper and tight end Aaron Hernandez, both in the NFL, combined for 65 percent of Tebow's passing offense last year.

The leading returning receiver, Thompson, caught 24 passes for 343 yards and four touchdowns a year ago.

And yet the offense could still improve on last year's SEC-leading 442.4 yards of total offense per game.

Brantley has built chemistry with the unproven yet talented young receivers for years in practice.

"The goal this year is to see what the face of our offense is going to be," offensive coordinator Steve Addazio says. "Who are we? What are we going to be? I really don't know that yet."

Last year's offense relied on Tebow's legs. Of Florida's 555 carries, 217 came from Tebow, who finished with a team-high 910 yards.

SEC foes caught onto the trend, as the Gators converted just two of 15 red zone trips for touchdowns during a midseason stretch.

Addazio, who served as interim coach during Meyer's leave of absence from January to late February, says the spring served as "ground zero" for the offensive retooling.

"It's going to be different," Addazio says. "We were an option football team a lot last year. We'll still run option football, but you're going to see those 10 carries will be equated probably into tailback carries, divided up among tailback carries and throws. That makes you different for sure."

Young receivers such as Frankie Hammond Jr., Omarius Hines and T.J. Lawrence are ready to flourish under Brantley's pass-happy leadership. Andre Debose, deemed as the next Percy Harvin out of high school, spent the last year recovering from hamstring surgery.

The Florida defense must shape a new identity while fighting to match the intensity of one of the country's best units in 2009. Florida played six games without allowing a defensive touchdown last year under former defensive coordinator Charlie Strong, now Louisville's head coach.

Replacing Strong is former Arizona Cardinals defensive backs coach Teryl Austin, who will rely on a handful of leftover veterans and undeniable young talent.

Safety Ahmad Black, defensive end Justin Trattou and linebackers Brandon Hicks and A.J. Jones must provide leadership as senior starters.

Incoming freshmen such as defensive end Ronald Powell and defensive tackle Sharif Floyd could push for starting spots to accentuate the star-studded 2010 recruiting class, arguably Meyer's best.

RECRUITING REPORT

This is one of the top recruiting classes by any school in recent memory. Urban Meyer's group is led by four five-star prospects.

The talent starts on the defensive line, where the Gators are bringing in as good a unit as one could imagine. The lineman group features three five-star players in Ronald Powell, Sharif Floyd and Dominique Easley and another highly regarded four-star prospect in Leon Orr. Matt Elam, a versatile safety/linebacker, adds to the five-star tally. Elam was one of the top prospects in Florida.

Though UF signed only two offensive linemen, Ian Silberman and Chaz Green are two of the best in the nation. The rich are also getting richer in the speed category, too, with outstanding athletes like Jonathan Dowling, Jaylen Watkins, Jordan Haden, Mack Brown and Chris Dunkley all heading to Florida.

A.J. GREEN, WR

During last year's 8-5 campaign, Georgia finished 10th in the SEC in scoring defense and fell to the bottom half of the league in most major offensive categories.

The 2010 season couldn't have come quickly enough.

After almost a decade of college football excellence, Georgia coach Mark Richt must prove himself for once as he enters his 10th year.

The Bulldogs won four of their last five games in 2009, but they needed a clean break from former defensive coordinator Willie Martinez while establishing a future at quarterback after the one-year Joe Cox era quickly soured.

The quarterback battle between junior Logan Gray and redshirt freshman Aaron Murray could see plenty of momentum changes before the season.

Meanwhile, the expectations at Georgia have not changed despite the deviation from Richt's standard of double-digit-win seasons.

"There's a new level of energy and a new level of excitement," says Richt, one of seven college coaches in history to win at least 80 games in his first eight seasons. "I think it's critical we identify the players I feel like can help us compete for an SEC championship."

Part of that process is secure behind wide receiver A.J. Green, arguably the country's best, and all five returning starters from an offensive line that allowed a league-low 12 sacks in '09.

Sophomore running back Washaun Ealey, who recorded 717 yards last season in nine games, could form a potent tandem with Green. Caleb King will also provide backfield firepower.

Ealey says offensive coordinator Mike Bobo, who took some heat last season

BULLET POINTS

- ➔ An experienced offense must wait for a new quarterback to develop.
- ➔ Questions surround whether there are enough elite game-changers to support receiver A.J. Green.
- ➔ The defense should be faster and more disruptive in a new 3-4 scheme.

OUTBACK BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING WASHAUN EALEY, RB

Whichever quarterback wins the starting job will be inexperienced and in need of a potent running game. Insert Ealey, who showed promise as a freshman last season with 717 yards on 125 carries.

for an erratic offense, wants Georgia to revisit the program's run-heavy identity.

The inexperienced new quarterback will need the help. Murray, a former high school star from Plant High in Tampa, Fla., could have the job's inside track, but Richt did not name a starter in the spring.

"Every great team runs the ball," Ealey says. "We've just been talking about gaining yards. We know we left a lot of yards out there on the field last year."

Replacing Martinez is Todd Grantham, the former Dallas Cowboys' defensive line coach who is transitioning the Bulldogs into a 3-4 defense.

Many of Georgia's defensive leaders are gone, including linebacker Rennie Curran and linemen Jeff Owens and Geno Atkins.

But such star power didn't help the Bulldogs erase an SEC-worst two turnovers off fumbles and 23 touchdown passes allowed last season.

Georgia spent all spring playing chess with its various defensive pieces. Now, switching positions seems normal.

Justin Houston will move from defensive end to outside linebacker despite leading the team in sacks (7.5) and tackles for a loss (15) in 2009. Former lineman Cornelius Washington also makes a similar transition.

DeAngelo Tyson, Demarcus Dobbs and Abry Jones have emerged on the line, while defensive backs Brandon Boykin and Nick Williams needed another year of experience to match their talent.

The players don't seem to mind the changes, as long as they can play liberated football.

"I just see the energy and how people are flying to the ball," says linebacker Marcus Downtin, the team's leading returning tackler (57). "With the athletes we've got, I think it's going to be a shock to everybody."

RECRUITING REPORT

Mark Richt has built high expectations in Athens. Before February, when the Bulldogs finished with the No. 15 class in the nation, Georgia had a string of top-10 recruiting classes dating back to 2002. Still, the Bulldogs brought in a number of high-upside kids in the class of 2010.

T.J. Stripling is a lanky, wiry and athletic defensive end.

Brent Benedict is one of the nation's top linemen, but has to recover from a devastating knee injury suffered in his senior year.

Alec Ogletree is a major pickup from within the state, as are defensive tackles Mike Thornton and Garrison Smith. Junior college prospect Jakar Hamilton adds instant depth at safety and could start immediately.

Running back Ken Malcome, quarterback Hutson Mason and defensive ends Jalen Fields and Dexter Morant are among the other notables in this class. Mason received a late offer from Richt after setting a Georgia prep record by passing for 4,582 yards and 57 touchdowns as a senior.

ALSHON
JEFFERY, WR

Excuse Steve Spurrier for applying the pressure to his players these days. He even publicly challenged third-year starting quarterback Stephen Garcia all spring.

This is, after all, Spurrier's best chance in six years to regain his "head ball coach" magic in Columbia.

The first and second spots in the SEC East are usually reserved for Florida, Tennessee and Georgia, but those three programs face uncertainties this fall.

The Gamecocks, meanwhile, return 15 starters with plenty of young talent developing. The window is small for Spurrier to provide South Carolina with more than nine wins in a season for the first time since 1984, when the team went 10-2. But South Carolina hasn't recorded a nine-win season since 2001.

A breakthrough won't happen without mustering a respectable running game and avoiding sacks.

Spurrier says the Gamecocks are developing depth at every position in case Garcia or anyone else isn't ready to perform.

Famous for starting hot and fizzling late, South Carolina just doesn't get it done in November. The Gamecocks are a combined 3-12 in the final five games of the last three seasons, including two consecutive bowl losses.

This year's team aims to change that trend.

Fueled by a reputable defense that hasn't always enjoyed offensive support, the Gamecocks hired new offensive line/running game coordinator Shawn Elliott from Appalachian State to pair with quarterbacks coach G.A. Mangus, who might call the plays this year.

Despite showing growth as a redshirt sophomore, Garcia took 34 sacks in the 2009 regular season behind a running game that ranked last in the conference with 125 yards per contest.

No wonder South Carolina is on its third offensive line coach in as many years.

Ready to curb the backfield losses is Marcus Lattimore, the country's top tailback in the 2010 recruiting class. Sophomore Kenny Miles and senior Brian Maddox could join Lattimore to form a potent running back committee.

Garcia, who finished second in the league with 2,733 passing yards in the regular season, plans to cut his sacks in half by expediting his reading of opposing defenses. A big year could thrust him into the conversation of elite SEC quarterbacks.

THE NEXT BIG THING STEPHON GILMORE, CB

As a freshman, Gilmore showed that the Gamecocks' defense could put him on an island and he wouldn't get burned too often. Improvement as a sophomore could thrust Gilmore into a conversation about the top cornerbacks in the SEC after 56 tackles and an interception last season.

He must develop more chemistry with his basketball roster of deep-threat playmakers: 6-6 tight end Weslye Saunders, 6-5 wide receiver Tori Gurley and 6-4 wideout Alshon Jeffery.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

Unlike predecessor Lane Kiffin, first-year coach Derek Dooley prefers to stay low-key and dodge the headlines.

But if Dooley wins big with this roster, he deserves plenty of attention.

Tennessee is runaway-model thin at too many positions to be considered a major conference contender just yet.

The offensive line doesn't return any starters after tackle Aaron Douglas transferred in the offseason. Jarrod Shaw, who started three games at guard in early 2009, is the only player with any meaningful experience.

The top two running backs are gone after Montario Hardesty graduated and Bryce Brown left the team after one season.

Tennessee fans don't know what to expect from the quarterback battle after Nick Stephens left the team in April, and Matt Simms and Tyler Bray have yet to stand out after spring practice.

Though the defense still has enough playmakers to fluster some teams, the Vols lost arguably their three best defensive players in safety Eric Berry, linebacker Rico McCoy and tackle Dan Williams.

Only resolve, poise and some old-fashioned fundamentals will help Tennessee prevail under Dooley, the third Tennessee coach in as many seasons after Kiffin left for USC in January.

Dooley, hired in just enough time to salvage most of Tennessee's impressive 2010 recruiting class, says he expects to provide long-term stability in Knoxville through recruiting. But it's too early to ask freshmen to carry this year's team.

The Volunteers, who finished 7-6 last season, can find support in a receiving corps that returns its top three playmakers. Wide receivers Gerald Jones and Denarius Moore and tight end Luke Stocker combined for 16 touchdowns in 2009. High-profile signee Da'Rick Rogers could bolster the already strong attack.

Brown's departure doesn't ease the transition for the new quarterback, who could use an experienced tailback to count on. But the bigger problem is that nobody won the QB job in the spring, although junior Matt Simms holds a small lead.

But running back Tauren Poole emerged as what Dooley calls a "real steady hand" at the position. Poole will battle with David Oku for the most carries.

Tennessee still has defensive standouts, though its biggest star, former defensive coordinator Monte Kiffin, took his Tampa 2 defense to USC.

The Vols will expect linebacker Nick Reveiz to provide leadership, while Chris Walker and Ben Martin are potential NFL talents.

THE NEXT BIG THING DENARIUS MOORE, WR

The Volunteers' biggest strength could be at wide receiver, where Moore led the team with seven touchdown catches in 2009. The 6-1, 190-pound senior has the size to create separation off the line and enough speed to win over the top.

5 KENTUCKY WILDCATS

WILDCATS WILDCATS WILDCATS WILDCATS

The newly retired Rich Brooks can revel in his success at Kentucky.

Brooks took over a probation-plagued program in 2003 and provided stability, four straight winning seasons (2006-09) for the first time since the 1950s and four straight bowl appearances, a school first.

New coach Joker Phillips now has the arduous task of growing the UK brand even larger.

Topping Brooks might require Phillips, a long-time Brooks assistant and coach-in-waiting, to win or share the school's first league title since 1976.

Yet, Kentucky hasn't displayed the raw talent and athleticism needed to become a true Southeastern Conference East contender.

Hope lies with an offense that could improve in 2010 behind a few versatile playmakers and a seasoned defensive front seven that must shrug off last year's 183.2 rushing yards allowed per game, second to last in the conference.

Phillips is asking players to catch up to his pace before evaluating wins and losses. During spring drills, Phillips required every position group to sprint to every station, drill and scrimmage.

Kentucky looks most comfortable when playing in a high-octane offense. Former quarterbacks Andre Woodson, Jared Lorenzen and Tim Couch all flourished in a pass-happy attack.

No one knows this better than Phillips, who faces uncertainty at quarterback, as Morgan Newton, Ryan Mossakowski and Mike Hartline battle for the starting job.

Hartline, a senior, didn't fit that description as last year's starter when the Wildcats finished eighth in the league in red zone conversions.

Kentucky might do best finding creative ways to get playmakers the ball. Randall Cobb proved he is one of the country's most versatile athletes after recording a combined 1,020 yards and 14 touchdowns last year. Cobb will play wide receiver this season with occasional action in the Wildcat formation. Running back Derrick Locke, fresh off a 907-yard season, is one of the most underrated offensive weapons in the league because of his combination of speed and ability to burst through tackles.

Donald Russell, CoShik Williams and Jonathan George provide enough running back depth to make things interesting for this offense.

That's if the offensive line can protect them. The Wildcats lose four starters on the line, prompting Chandler Burden to switch from defensive end to offensive tackle.

Plenty of upperclassmen lead the defensive line, but the losses of linebacker Micah Johnson and corner Trevard Lindley will be felt.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

Years of progress at Vanderbilt shouldn't be forgotten in a locker room that felt nothing but heartache last season.

Injuries and offensive ineptitude pushed Vanderbilt to an ugly 2-10 finish in 2009, evoking memories of coach Bobby Johnson's early years in Nashville.

And to think the Commodores broke down decades-long barriers just the year before, when they won their first bowl game in 53 years to culminate a 7-6 season in 2008.

Nothing will push Johnson more leading up to this season than helping his team rediscover its confidence. The Commodores didn't win an SEC game for the first time since Johnson's debut season in 2002.

Patching up this wounded team starts with an offense that mustered 8.9 points per game against league opponents and finished 110th nationally in scoring offense.

Larry Smith, now a junior, completed 46.7 percent of his passes with 1,126 yards, four touchdowns and seven interceptions. Though athletic with respectable arm strength, Smith failed to show poise when pressured by physical defensive lines.

Things got worse in the red zone, where Vanderbilt converted 14 touchdowns in 36 trips last year. Smith shared snaps in spring practice with senior Jared Funk and redshirt freshman Charlie Goro. The battle appears undecided heading into fall camp.

Despite losing a combined 11 starters on both sides of the ball, Vanderbilt has enough young playmakers to make things interesting.

Warren Norman, the reigning SEC Freshman of the Year, is a top-shelf talent who led the team in rushing last year with 783 yards. Norman and running back Zac Stacy (478 rushing yards) are entering their sophomore seasons, providing a glimmer of young hope for the Commodores.

Vanderbilt also returns its top two receivers.

Vanderbilt's biggest concern on defense is stopping the run after allowing a league-worst 197.8 yards per game last season.

Gone are standouts such as linebacker Patrick Benoist and cornerback Myron Lewis, forcing the Commodores to win by committee on defense.

Two of Vanderbilt's top three tacklers return in linebacker Chris Marve (121 tackles) and safety Sean Richardson (84).

If Norman keeps pumping out touchdowns, he could compensate for the occasional defensive lapse.

Norman tied the league record for three kickoff touchdowns in a season, and Johnson says he wants to use him at wide receiver.

THE NEXT BIG THING

WARREN NORMAN, RB/KR

One of the conference's brightest young talents tied the SEC record with three kickoffs returned for touchdowns in 2009. The reigning conference Freshman of the Year is versatile enough to play wide receiver, running back and return specialist for the Commodores.

1 ALABAMA CRIMSON TIDE

MARK
INGRAM, RB

Four months after Alabama earned the national title, quarterback Greg McElroy couldn't remember if he actually celebrated the Crimson Tide's win over Texas.

The team got a couple of weeks off after the season, but McElroy rested more than he reflected.

"I don't think any of us will understand the magnitude until a couple of years from now," says McElroy, who helped the Tide win their first title since 1992. "We haven't had the chance to bask in the glory."

Keeping busy may help add another championship chapter to the storied program, a chance not too far-fetched for the talented Crimson Tide.

Despite losing nine defensive starters, Alabama is too strong at too many positions to fall out of SEC contention.

Reigning Heisman Trophy winner Mark Ingram teams with sophomore Trent Richardson to form the country's most potent rushing attack. After combining for 2,409 yards and 25 touchdowns last season, the duo will make McElroy's job easier as a game manager.

Receiver Julio Jones has surefire NFL ability and is finally healthy entering his third season. An offensive line stocked with young talent should strengthen Alabama's grip on smash-mouth football in the South.

Gone are defensive leaders such as linebacker Rolando McClain, tackle Terrence Cody and cornerback Javier Arenas. But the way Ingram sees it, the defense must turn inexperience into wins just like the offense did a year before.

A new quarterback, new offensive line and new running backs didn't stop last year's team from posting 31.7 points per game (within 5.6 points of the SEC lead).

"We were young—some of us had played before, but we weren't really established yet," Ingram says. "This year we are real confident and picking up where we left off last year. I think that (experience) has helped our offense."

Though coach Nick Saban trusts his veteran group, he's pushing them physically like never before, McElroy says. The offseason was defined by heavy contact, sprinting and rigorous lifting. Nothing unusual, but the sheer quantity let players know Saban is for real. Saban says he wants his team to drop the thought of repeating and focus on maximizing potential.

So, during the spring, the team crafted a mindset: Winning is what you're supposed to do. The 2009 title was the goal, not a surprise.

If that team was motivated by years of disappointment, this season's team will thrive off grit, like the Tide's running backs did a year ago.

Ingram took most of the carries over Richardson last season—any Heisman winner should carry the load—but don't be surprised if that changes this year in favor of Richardson, a special talent who should be unleashed.

After all, there will be plenty of carries to go around. Alabama has no reason to deviate from the plan of almost twice as many runs (601 attempts) as passes (346).

McElroy says his two backs are "very unselfish" and want to see each other succeed.

"Both bring a different dynamic to the table," McElroy says. "Trent's a downhill, between-the-tackles runner, while Mark's an Emmitt Smith type who can do it all. We'll probably just go with the hot back at the time."

The team will still rely on offensive balance with play-action passing and the occasional deep threat, but McElroy says the coaching staff trusts him enough to make more decisions with the passing game.

The senior from Southlake, Texas, has never lost a football game as a starter, a streak dating back to high school.

"Earlier in the season I had false confidence," says McElroy, a poised signal-caller who had 17 touchdowns and four interceptions in 2009. "Now I'm using my mind more and making better decisions."

However, Alabama isn't without its flaws. With safety Robby Green ineligible, the Tide are thin in the secondary. Mark Barron is one of the SEC's best safeties, but he'll play among a bunch of unproven underclassmen in September.

The interior defensive line is not guaranteed success without Cody around to stuff so many run attempts like he did during his career. And Nico Johnson sprained his MCL during the spring, temporarily depleting Alabama at linebacker.

But if you ask McElroy, linebacker Dont'a Hightower hasn't lost a step on his surgically repaired knee. And defensive end Marcell Dareus, the Most Valuable Defensive Player of the BCS title game against Texas, could be one of the SEC's best linemen.

"Where we lost in size and experience, we've kind of picked up in athleticism and speed," says McElroy about the defense. "I truly believe this defense we have coming back probably has more talent and top-to-bottom speed than last year. We don't have the experience and savvy, but they can learn that."

RECRUITING REPORT

Nick Saban and his staff consistently recruit at a very high level. Few programs are in a position to be "disappointed" with a top-five recruiting class, but that is the case in Tuscaloosa. Alabama expects to contend for the No. 1 class every year.

The Crimson Tide continued their recruiting success in 2010 by bringing in elite talent while also filling crucial needs. The secondary was a priority, and by landing five-star Demarcus Milliner, lockdown cornerback John Fulton, juco standout Dequan Menzie and safeties Nick Perry and Jarrick Williams, that need was addressed.

Adding speed was also an area where Alabama made some big strides. Running back Corey Grant and wide receiver DeAndrew White will be among the fastest players in the SEC.

Prospects like Kelwone Malone, Ronald Carswell and Blake Sims all add a new element of athleticism to the offense.

2 AUBURN TIGERS

RYAN PUGH, C

Shortly after the 2008 season, Auburn fans questioned the hiring of a man who went 5-19 in two seasons at Iowa State.

But Gene Chizik isn't fielding many complaints these days considering the momentum Auburn takes into 2010.

The Tigers are fresh off an 8-5 season after establishing school records in numerous offensive categories. In February, Chizik hauled in the country's No. 4 recruiting class to complement the 24 seniors already intact.

Though the Tigers are still young at numerous positions, there are enough pieces to contend for an SEC West title.

"The vibe is beautiful," new starting running back Mario Fannin says. "Everybody has bought into coach Chizik's system. He tells us on and off

GAME TO WATCH

N.26 @ALABAMA 21-26

The Tigers had the national champion Tide on the ropes in last year's 26-21 Iron Bowl loss, a game that fueled Auburn all offseason.

BOWL PROJECTION

CHICK-FIL-A BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING CAMERON NEWTON, QB

Newton was one of four quarterbacks battling for the starting job in the spring, but he appears to be Auburn's future at the position. The former Florida quarterback who transferred to a junior college before coming to Auburn has plenty of upside and athleticism.

the field to be 'Auburn men.'"

An 'Auburn man,' by Fannin's account, is "doing something out of the goodness of your own heart," not for others to notice.

Plenty have noticed what's happening on the Auburn campus, but winning this year won't be fueled by flashy stars. The Tigers are relying on a new quarterback, new running back and a defense looking to find consistency.

In offensive coordinator Gus Malzahn's first season, Auburn set school records for points scored (433), total yards (5,613) and passing touchdowns (25). The loss of running back Ben Tate hurts since Auburn rushed for 212 yards per game last year, but Fannin averaged 8.4 yards per carry as a backup.

Veterans returning at safety, linebacker and defensive end must vault Auburn from its 27.5 points allowed per game in 2009, last in the league.

Linebacker Josh Byrnes, the team's leader with 104 tackles, says last year's 26-21 loss to eventual national champion Alabama in the Iron Bowl encapsulated the Tigers' season.

Good, not great.

"So that's our goal: good to great," Byrnes says. "If we were great, we'd be national champions. Florida and Alabama, they were great teams. But we've got experience and a lot of talent. There's no reason why we can't be great."

Despite losing All-SEC end Antonio Coleman, Byrnes says speed and strength won't be a problem for the Tigers' defense.

"We have the biggest front four I've ever been a part of," Byrnes says. "Strongest guys I've seen in a while."

Four Auburn quarterbacks battled for the starting job in the spring, but it appears that former junior college player Cameron Newton is the leader.

After leaving Florida amid criminal charges for allegedly stealing a laptop, Newton successfully started over at Blinn (Texas) College with almost 3,000 yards passing and a combined 38 touchdowns rushing and passing last season.

The former five-star recruit from Atlanta seems tailored for Malzahn's spread offense because of his athleticism and 6-6 frame.

"He wants to be a leader, and that's something we need at that position," Fannin says.

If Newton has red zone troubles, he can rely on kicker Wes Byrum, who made a league-best percentage of his field goal attempts (15-for-16) last season.

The Tigers could make a late-November run if the defense can stay off the field after giving up 268 first downs last season.

"It fuels us a lot knowing we were that close," Fannin says. "It's time to get back on track."

RECRUITING REPORT

No coaching staff had a more impressive recruiting effort in the class of 2010 than Auburn's. The Tigers finished with the No. 4 class in the country and served notice that they will be a new force on the recruiting trail. Gene Chizik and his staff are willing to go head-to-head with any program in the country for elite prospects.

This talented group has several prospects arriving on the Plains with major fanfare. Michael Dyer was the nation's No. 2 prospect at running back and the top player in Arkansas. Shon Coleman was a five-star offensive tackle and the top prospect in Mississippi. Trovon Reed was the top player in Louisiana. Corey Lemonier was one of the most highly recruited players in south Florida and had his pick of schools.

Defensive tackle Jeffrey Whitaker was similarly sought after out of Georgia. Kenneth Carter, Jawara White and Jake Holland were among the elite in-state prospects that Auburn landed, ending the stranglehold Nick Saban has had on Alabama in recent years.

On top of all that, Auburn landed the nation's top junior college prospect in quarterback Cameron Newton. Many expect Newton to step in right away and run Gus Malzahn's explosive offense.

3 LSU TIGERS

25

JORDAN
JEFFERSON, QB

The days of eating comfortably from past successes are waning for LSU fans.

The Tigers' last title was three seasons ago, and the results are a combined 17-9 since.

That's a respectable record, but two titles in the last seven years have elevated the standard and changed the culture in Baton Rouge.

Despite plenty of talent on both sides of the ball, LSU is no guarantee this year after losing 12 starters, including eight on defense.

Coach Les Miles says he likes the direction of the program and the pieces in place for a successful run.

Last season, LSU seemed to shore up its defensive lapse under new coordinator John Chavis, finishing third in the league in scoring defense.

Key playmakers returning include two All-SEC honorees in cornerback Patrick Peterson and linebacker Kelvin Sheppard, who had 8.5 tackles for a loss last year. Peterson has NFL talent and the ability to work on an island for the Tigers' defense.

Cornerback Morris Claiborne and defensive end Sam Montgomery made a serious push during spring practice.

While LSU can find comfort in its blitz packages, the offense must craft an identity after finishing 76th nationally in scoring offense with 24.8 points per game.

The running game, expected to be a strength behind Charles Scott and Keiland Williams, never controlled the tempo for the Tigers and finished next to last in the league with 129.6 yards per game.

Quarterback Jordan Jefferson took 34 sacks and played relatively unspectacular football as the starter.

The Tigers couldn't find a permanent role for five-star recruit Russell Shepard (who's now a wide receiver) and never maximized the potential of receiver Brandon LaFell, who's now in the NFL.

Peterson, a second-team All-American in 2009, says an enhanced running game could affect both sides of the ball.

Stevan Ridley, Richard Murphy and Michael Ford will be asked to take over in the backfield. Ridley has the edge after rushing for 104 yards in the spring game, but Ford, a freshman, has also been impressive.

By all accounts, Jefferson did not light up spring practices. But the Tigers seem dedicated to the junior who enters his second full season as the starter. Jefferson still has talented targets in Terrance Toliver and Shepard, who rushed for 277 yards last year in the Wildcat formation. Miles is asking Jefferson to run a more efficient offense.

THE NEXT BIG THING RUSSELL SHEPARD, WR

Shepard's immense talents were underutilized in the LSU offense last year as a freshman, as he played mostly out of the Wildcat formation. Focusing on wide receiver allows Shepard to become a consistent option for the Tigers.

Byran Jones DT, 6-3, 297 A dominating force in Arkansas small-school football, Jones was a "must get" for Arkansas as the top in-state line prospect.	Calvin Barnett DT, 6-3, 330 Landing this U.S. Army All-American was a shocker. The former Oklahoma State commit stunned many by signing with the Hogs.	Cam Feldt OT, 6-5, 290 Feldt was one of the best in Arkansas' 2010 class. The Texas product was one of the Lone Star State's top O-line prospects.	Jatashun Beachum ATH, 6-2, 275 "Big Tex" is a versatile prospect. He played QB in high school and could play at defensive tackle, tight end, fullback or quarterback.	Eric Bennett ATH, 5-10, 176 Bennett is one of the top players out of the state of Oklahoma. He could be a lockdown corner or an explosive wide receiver.

Arkansas coach Bobby Petrino's offensive wizardry plays out like a maze in Ryan Mallett's head. Mallett, Petrino's star quarterback, has seen infinite playbook possibilities in two years under Petrino.

"We can get to the same routes 10, 15 different ways," Petrino says. "It's still the same thing to the quarterback, but it's getting different guys open. Some teams might have two or three ways to get to one play. We can go 10 or 15."

Petrino's offense, complete with nine starters returning, is another reminder of why Arkansas' ballooning expectations are deserved yet fragile.

Mallett, a 6-7, 238-pounder with an NFL arm, will be the league's best quarterback throwing to his top five returning receivers behind a line returning its core.

The offense is good enough to win an SEC title, but the difference between 7-5 and 10-2 could have nothing to do with Petrino's pass-happy attack.

The Razorbacks were last in the league in scoring defense in 2009, giving up 401.8 yards per game and a league-worst 251.8 passing yards per game.

The offense compensated by throwing for almost 50 yards more per game than Arkansas' defense allowed, but the Razorbacks' memories of giving up a combined 76 points in early-season matchups with Georgia and Alabama are still fresh.

Experience could breed confidence as the defense returns five of its top seven tacklers.

The Razorbacks can take solace in returning defensive playmakers such as end Jake Bequette (65 tackles, 5.5 sacks), tackle Zach Stadther (42 tackles) and linebacker Jerry Franklin, the team's leading tackler the last two seasons.

The Razorbacks lose versatile playmaker Michael Smith, a 5-9 speedster who gave Arkansas a reliable option at running back and receiver. The team will turn to sophomore Ronnie Wingo to gain tough running yards.

Mallett says he looks forward to a spike in the running game as the Razorbacks return four starting offensive linemen.

"They know we have to run the ball better to be successful," Mallett says. "In the passing game, they protected really well. But now we can also go more downhill, especially with Ronnie's size."

The catalyst is Mallett, who nursed a broken foot that caused him to miss the entire spring. He rehabbed, watched game film and observed the offense during spring practice alongside Petrino, who gave Mallett the occasional "did you see that?" to keep him learning.

THE NEXT BIG THING COBI HAMILTON, WR

The Razorbacks are loaded at receiver, but the buzz around Fayetteville is that Hamilton could have more upside than anyone on the roster after 19 catches for 347 yards as a freshman.

Once Mallett is healthy this fall, the fans in Fayetteville will watch the most talented Razorbacks team since the Darren McFadden/Felix Jones days.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

Let the cleansing begin for Ole Miss.

Leaders are gone at almost every position, but those same leaders unraveled in the face of last year's sizable expectations.

Quarterback Jevan Snead, playmakers Dexter McCluster and Shay Hodge, offensive lineman John Jerry, cornerback Marshay Green, safety Kendrick Lewis and defensive end Greg Hardy led the Rebels to a 9-4 season—not enough to validate the consensus top-10 preseason ranking.

Ole Miss now moves forward with serious holes to fill, but with a renewed spirit.

The Rebels must rely on experience on the offensive and defensive lines along with a bruising running game behind 220-pound Brandon Bolden, who was productive the last two years with 1,156 yards on an average of 5.1 yards per carry.

The quarterback battle between Nathan Stanley and Raymond Cotton will be decided this fall, but don't be surprised if coach Houston Nutt uses a two-quarterback system because of Cotton's running ability.

Nutt expected more stability at quarterback this year before Snead surprised the team with his early departure to the NFL. Then again, the Rebels probably don't mind moving on from Snead's 20 interceptions in 2009.

Ole Miss entered the spring with many starting positions undecided after losing 12 starters, including seven on offense.

The offensive line should remain steady, as A.J. Hawkins, Rishaw Johnson, Bobby Massie and Bradley Sowell showed more consistency this spring.

Despite the loss of Hardy and his 26 career sacks, the defensive line is still stacked behind end Kentrell Lockett, Ted Laurent and 330-pound tackle Jerrell Powe, who registered 12 tackles for loss last season. Lawon Scott, LaMark Armour and Justin Smith provide depth. Ole Miss could improve on a rushing defense that finished in the middle of the pack in last year's league rankings.

Compensating for the youth will be defensive coordinator Tyrone Nix, one of the league's brightest coaches who didn't bite on the potential chance to join Florida's staff. Nix must transition three new starters into the secondary.

Lockett says he's been impressed with the development of young players such as cornerback Charles Sawyer, linebacker Mike Marry and safety Damien Jackson, a junior college transfer who could supplant Fon Ingram.

Ole Miss expected to create more havoc last season but registered only nine interceptions, which tied for ninth in the league.

THE NEXT BIG THING BRANDON BOLDEN, RB

With quarterback Jevan Snead and all-purpose threat Dexter McCluster gone, the Rebels must turn to the 5-11, 220-pound Bolden, who goes from second to primary option in his junior season. Expect the Rebels to rely on Bolden's bruising style.

CHAD BUMPHIS, WR

After tweaking his time-management skills in Year 1, Mississippi State coach Dan Mullen has a renewed, hands-on approach with his players.

"I can actually start coaching more," jokes Mullen, who's entering his second season in Starkville. "I'm spending more time with the quarterbacks, the offense."

Good timing. The Bulldogs' success will hinge largely on whether Mullen brands the offense with the touches that earned him praise as a coordinator at Florida.

Mullen's offenses with the Gators posted back-to-back season averages of 40-plus points, but MSU finished 113th nationally in passing offense last season.

The Bulldogs went 5-7 behind running back Anthony Dixon's SEC-leading 126.5 rushing yards per game. With Dixon gone, Mullen will rely on many of his own recruits, including wide receiver Chad Bumphis and Tyler Russell, who is battling Chris Relf for the quarterback job.

State might play two quarterbacks because of Russell's running ability in Mullen's spread offense. The starting job won't be settled until the fall.

The days of letting Dixon wear teams down with his size are over.

"We're not changing the offense, but we're going to balance it based on what we have," Mullen says. "I think for us what you'll see is more balance, spreading the ball around among other people (rather) than having one workhorse."

Eight of 22 projected starters are sophomores, but the Bulldogs compensate with plenty of confidence on the offensive and defensive lines.

All-SEC candidate Derek Sherrod is one of four regulars back on the offensive line. Defensive end Pernell McPhee, a former junior college standout, might be the conference's best after making 12 tackles for a loss in 2009.

Fletcher Cox, Josh Boyd, Nick Bell and 330-pounder James Carmon provide depth on a D-line that should improve on last year's 146 rushing yards allowed per game. When building a winner, the lines are probably where to start.

Linebacker K.J. Wright will assume a leadership role from the middle of the field. Cornerback Johnthan Banks showed big-play ability as a freshman after returning two of his four interceptions for touchdowns.

New defensive coordinator Manny Diaz, who comes to Starkville from Middle Tennessee, takes over a capable defense.

"We're playing tough, we're blitzing a lot more," linebacker

Chris White says. "We pretty much have our whole defense in."

Despite strength at many positions, Mullen wants to develop more depth in order to play faster and with "ridiculous effort."

THE NEXT BIG THING CHAD BUMPHIS, WR

Dan Mullen coached Percy Harvin at Florida, and now Bumphis is the closest thing to Harvin at Mississippi State. The 5-10 speedster will be the focal point of the Bulldogs' offense.

FOUR FEARLESS FORECASTS

- 1 Even with a new QB and plenty of other first-year starters, Troy will remain in contention for the Sun Belt title and could also grab a bowl berth.
- 2 Despite being the elected "home" team against Michigan State at Detroit's Ford Field, Florida Atlantic fans will be extremely outnumbered.
- 3 Another Sun Belt team—or two—will dump a BCS conference opponent. Most likely victim: Minnesota, which visits Middle Tennessee Sept. 2.
- 4 North Texas will double its 2009 victory total of two, thanks to a stouter defense and an explosive offensive attack.

ASCENDING

FLORIDA INTERNATIONAL The Golden Panthers have been building steadily and accumulating talent under coach Mario Cristobal, and now it's time for them to make a move. A bowl berth is a distinct possibility.

DESCENDING

LOUISIANA-MONROE The Warhawks started the 2009 league campaign 5-1 before faltering in the last two weeks. Look for that skid to continue as Louisiana-Monroe struggles to replace several key components.

Acceptance for least of FBS leagues is coming slowly but surely

By Michael Bradley, Correspondent

It's a little tough to buy the pitch that the Sun Belt is a "BCS conference," as the league office would like us to believe. Yes, if the Sun Belt champion is ranked among the top 12 in those wacky BCS rankings, it will grab one of the coveted spots in a big-money bowl game, but let's be realistic about things: This is not an automatic bid, no more than Boise State's and TCU's tickets to college football's VIP room were predetermined.

That said, it's hard to look at the Sun Belt as anything other than a conference that is on the rise. Unlike other leagues that might be decimated by the potential coming round of realignment or are struggling with low attendance figures and some shaky members, the Sun Belt is growing and thriving. Western Kentucky's debut in 2009 wasn't exactly overpowering, but the Hilltoppers are in and ready to go. And in two years, South Alabama will swell the ranks to 10 teams.

The football prosperity continues in the postseason, since the Sun Belt could have a third bowl team in 2010, thanks to its provisional agreement with the Detroit-based Little Caesars Pizza Bowl. Granted, the conference doesn't get a spot unless the Big Ten can't field enough eligible participants, but you take what you can get.

And last year, the Sun Belt got a lot. In addition to Middle Tennessee's New Orleans Bowl win over Southern Miss, the Blue Raiders also boasted a regular season victory over Maryland. Buoyed by those triumphs, Middle Tennessee became the first Sun Belt team to record 10 wins in a season. Troy, meanwhile, posted nine regular-season wins, which made it the first time the league had two schools win nine games before the bowls kicked off.

The '09 season was something, but things could be even better this time. Middle Tennessee is again loaded, while Florida International is surging. Bet against Troy at your own risk, and look out for Arkansas State, which has been hovering near the top of the conference for a while. Even Western Kentucky, which is getting its FBS legs under it, has hope now that former Hilltopper standout QB Willie Taggart has taken over as coach.

RECRUITING ROUNDUP By Barton Simmons, Rivals.com

- 1. WESTERN KENTUCKY In Willie Taggart's first year recruiting at Western Kentucky, he raided the state of Florida for 11 signees.
- 2. TROY A characteristically big class for Troy (34 signees) was led by talented prospects like Mark Beard, B.J. Chitty and Dionte Ponder.
- 3. FLORIDA INTERNATIONAL Defensive tackle Jericho Lee should have an impact on the next level. He is joined by a class built primarily on local talent like cornerback Khambrel McGee.
- 4. MIDDLE TENNESSEE The Blue Raiders supplemented their standard raid of Georgia and Florida with seven signees from the California junior college ranks.
- 5. NORTH TEXAS Ten junior college signees, led by linebacker Forlando Johnson, should help give North Texas some immediate depth.
- 6. ARKANSAS STATE Four of Arkansas State's top five prospects come from junior colleges, but its most exciting signee may be Frankie Jackson out of Baton Rouge, La.
- 7. LOUISIANA-MONROE The Warhawks took advantage of their proximity to Texas by landing lineman Josh Allen of Cedar Hill and wide receiver Luke Russell of Denton Guyer.
- 8. LOUISIANA-LAFAYETTE Though the class is headlined by Dallas running back Aaron Spikes, the majority of the Ragin' Cajuns' class was made up of in-state players.
- 9. FLORIDA ATLANTIC The Owls didn't have much room in 2010, bringing in only 11 new names. Two of those are QBs, though.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

RATING THE RECRUITS

1	2	3	4	5
Khari Burke CB, 5-10, 164 Had five interceptions and returned one for a touchdown as a prep senior. He should compete for early playing time at cornerback.	Logan Kilgore QB, 6-3, 195 Kilgore has four years to play three seasons. He will be groomed to take over the quarterback reins from Dwight Dasher.	Eric Russell S, 5-11, 190 Russell is a safety prospect who is also a factor on special teams. He averaged more than 30 yards on 20 kickoff returns last year.	Chris Sharpe CB, 5-11, 175 Sharpe is a big cornerback who chose MTSU after receiving offers from Louisville, Southern Miss and Wisconsin.	Pat McNeil DT, 6-3, 280 Not only does McNeil have size, but he's also productive. He had 85 tackles, seven sacks and 17 tackles for loss as a senior.

At most schools, coaches replace their offensive and defensive coordinators after bad seasons—the better to deflect blame from their own performances. It's an old, proven formula that can buy the boss a little time to get ahead of the posse.

But at Middle Tennessee, coach Rick Stockstill needed new lieutenants on the offensive and defensive sides after a 10-victory campaign. Such is life in the Sun Belt. Prosperity can lead to better opportunities for assistant coaches. So Manny Diaz is off to run the defense at Mississippi State, and Tony Franklin is now at Louisiana Tech, practicing his brand of spread football. Not that Stockstill is forecasting any drastic changes in the way business will be done on the Murfreesboro campus.

That's a good thing, because last year, Middle Tennessee produced 10 wins, a triumph over Maryland and a seven-game winning streak to close the season, including a win over Southern Miss in the New Orleans Bowl. So it would be a good idea for Mike Schultz to keep spreading the field and Randall McCray to stick with the 4-3 scheme.

It all begins, of course, with quarterback Dwight Dasher, who entered last year as a huge question mark and became a first-rate spread operator. Although he improved his completion percentage a whopping 16.3 points (to 54.9), the senior still has work to do. He needs to become more accurate and cut back on last year's 14 interceptions. But as anyone who saw Dasher in the bowl game—when he threw for 162 yards and two TDs and rushed for 201 yards and two scores—knows, he is dangerous and potent.

Dasher didn't get a whole lot of work in the spring game, since Stockstill was looking to build some depth, and junior college transfer Logan Kilgore displayed a strong, accurate arm. Still, it's Dasher's show.

The question is whether he'll have the wideouts to work with. Middle Tennessee loses its top two receivers from last year but expects senior Garrett Andrews (35 catches, 4 TDs) and juniors Sancho McDonald (24, 2), Shane Blissard (19, 3) and Harold Turner (14, 3) to pick up the slack in the wide-open attack.

There is no problem with the ground game. Dasher rushed for 1,154 yards and 13 TDs last year, while the team also returns junior D.D. Kyles (857 yards) and senior Phillip Tanner, who missed most of last year with a knee injury. With four starters on the line returning, that unit looks solid as well.

The defense needs help at linebacker, but it can count on a solid secondary, led by corner Rod Issac and safeties Kevin Brown and Jeremy Kellem. Senior end Jamari Lattimore can get to the quarterback, as can his bookend, Emmanuel Perez.

THE NEXT BIG THING TAVARRS JEFFERSON, WR

Although he played only half of last season as a true freshman and needs to gain more experience, Jefferson has good hands and the talent to become a prime target.

If you happen to check in on the Sun Belt in early October and see that the Golden Panthers are an unsightly 0-4, fret not. With games against Rutgers, Texas A&M, Maryland and Pittsburgh—and all but the first one of those on the road—it's unlikely FIU will get anything out of the season's early schedule but some cash.

After that, things improve greatly, and Florida International should have enough to mount a run at the title. The team will do so with a heavy heart, however, after the murder of running back Kendall Berry in the spring.

The strength of the Golden Panthers is their defense, and new coordinator Geoff Collins has plenty of star power and depth at his disposal. Up front, sophomore Tourek Williams is a budding standout and part of a solid group.

Senior Toronto Smith made nine tackles for loss last year, and Aaron Davis was outstanding during the last half of the 2009 campaign. Joining that strong linebacker duo is sophomore Larvez "Pooh Bear" Mars, who has loads of potential.

Although the secondary picked off just 10 passes last year, it returns a couple of stalwarts in cornerbacks Jonathan Cyprien and Anthony Gaitor.

The key to whether FIU can challenge for the Sun Belt title will likely come under center. Fifth-year senior Wayne Younger battled Mississippi State transfer Wesley Carroll through the spring, and the competition should continue this summer.

T.Y. Hilton will try to stay healthy enough to torment defenses as the top weapon at wideout, while Syracuse transfer Jeremiah Harden looked great running the ball in the spring. Center Brad Serini leads a rebuilt line.

Last year, the Sun Belt title chase was supposed to come down to the Red Wolves and Troy, but a stagnant offense torpedoed Arkansas State's hopes of an SBC title.

It's unlikely people will be calling Arkansas State's attack "high-powered" this season, but it should be improved. Sophomore QB Ryan Aplin, who started three of the final four games last season and completed 65.3 percent of his throws, sat out spring ball with a knee injury.

Redshirt freshman Phillip Butterfield looked good in Aplin's absence in the spring and could mount a charge come August, though.

By the time 2011 dawns, this could be one dangerous outfit, especially if young receivers Taylor Stockemer, Allen Muse and Kedrick Murry continue to grow. Junior college transfer Dwayne Frampton will also provide instant help.

Junior Derek Lawson proved he could be a reliable runner last season. He'll work behind an experienced line and get support from powerful fullback Jermaine Robertson.

The defense returns its top four tacklers from last year and welcomes some juco reinforcements who should help immediately. Junior safety Kelcie McCray was a big-play specialist last year, picking off four passes and recovering three fumbles.

Arkansas State doesn't have many experienced hands at cornerback, but the arrival of juco transfer Darron Edwards will help.

Linebackers Demario Davis and Javon McKinnon are productive tacklers while up front, Arkansas State will lean on senior tackle Bryan Hall and hope end Brandon Joiner, a honorable mention junior college All-American last year, can pressure the QB.

4 TROY TROJANS

As usual, there are all sorts of questions surrounding the Troy team. Who will play quarterback? What to do with the defensive line? Can new coordinator Kenny Edenfield keep the offense strong?

Coach Larry Blakeney is talking about all the holes the Trojans have to fill. The last time he sounded this worried was in 1996, when a team that had lost 25 seniors from the previous year went to the I-AA (now FCS) semifinals.

But there is reason for concern under center, where junior Jamie Hampton and redshirt freshman Corey Robinson will take their competition into the summer to replace Levi Brown. At least the winner has senior Jerrel Jernigan (71 catches, 4 TDs) as a target. DuJuan Harris (583 yards, 10 TDs) proved to be a reliable running back last year, and he can count on returning tackles James Brown and Kyle Wilborn to open some holes.

Defensively, the Trojan front seven needs a facelift around linebacker Daniel Sheffield. Expect senior end Mario Addison and sophomore Jonathan Masaquai to step up, while junior Xavier Lamb has the experience and potential to be a productive middle linebacker.

The secondary welcomes back corner Bryan Willis, who led the team with four picks as a freshman in '09, and strong safety Barry Valcin. Senior Willard Ross should handle free safety duties, while junior college transfer Jimmie Anderson gets first shot at the other corner spot.

5 FLORIDA ATLANTIC OWLS

If you listen to Howard Schnellenberger talk about his Florida Atlantic team—or any team he has ever coached, for that matter—one gets the impression it could win the national title. Or the Super Bowl. Or both. He's a confident man who believes in himself and his plan.

Now in his 10th year with the Owls, Schnellenberger is getting closer to his immediate goal of winning the Sun Belt. He has some weapons to help him in the quest. It begins with senior quarterback Jeff Van Camp, who took over the reins with five games remaining last year and proved to be a productive, accurate passer who threw only two picks in 184 attempts. With a pair of solid returning receivers—Lester Jean and Avery Holley—along with tight end Rob Housler at his disposal, Van Camp could have a big year.

Running back Alfred Morris is the heart of the offense, as he led the league with 1,392 yards last season while scoring 11 times. The problem is that FAU's offensive line is completely new.

The secondary is the strength of the defense, at least in terms of returnees. But that group has to get better after allowing opposing QBs to complete 67.4 percent of their throws. Corners Tavious Polo and Tarvoris Hill are experienced, while strong safety Marcus Bartels made 112 tackles last year.

Middle linebacker Michael Lockley made 97 tackles last season, while end Kevin Cyrille also returns.

6 LA-LAFAYETTE RAGIN' CAJUNS

In 2009, the Ragin' Cajuns lost a load of skill-position performers on offense. This year's edition drops several top-rated offensive linemen. If only coach Rickey Bustle could put it all together, he might have something.

As it is, Louisiana-Lafayette is in good shape, provided it can continue to protect the quarterback and force turnovers. Returning under center is junior Chris Masson, who played solidly last year and will look to increase his accuracy (59.5 percent) and productivity (10 TDs) this season. And he'll have some proven targets, most notably tight end Ladarius Green, who averaged a solid 16.7 yards on his 32 catches last year. Senior Marlin Miller (37 catches) is a solid possession man.

Last year's ground game produced a lot of TDs (19) but averaged just 3.6 yards per carry. Expect junior Julian Shankle, who looked good in spring drills, and quick true freshman Robert Walker to be productive. Senior center Ian Burks leads the reconstituted line, which has depth and experience but few stalwarts.

Louisiana-Lafayette picked off 16 passes last year and returns plenty in the secondary, most notably junior cornerback Dwight Bentley and his senior counterpart, Orkeys Auriene. Senior safety Maurice Rolle picked off three passes in 2009, while junior Lance Kelley had two. Seniors Grant Fleming and Daylon McCoy lead a productive group of linebackers and senior end Terrell Richardson heads up the line.

7 LA-MONROE WARHAWKS

After heading into the final two weeks of the 2009 season with a 5-1 league mark and dreaming of postseason participation, the Warhawks crashed and burned, losing to Louisiana-Lafayette and Middle Tennessee to put a disappointing close on what had been a promising start.

Now, the Warhawks must find a way to build on the early momentum and get back into contention. At least some pieces are there to facilitate the move, beginning with Trey Revell.

The senior quarterback had a solid season last year but must improve his accuracy and cut back his interceptions or risk losing his spot to redshirt freshman Kolton Browning, who looked good during the spring. Whoever is under center will benefit from senior running back Frank Goodin (1,126 yards, 13 TDs).

However, there aren't many proven targets available at wideout. Junior Luther Ambrose snagged 34 balls last year to lead the bunch, but a group of youngsters needs to grow up. The same thing goes for the offensive line, which could get some help from junior college transfer Patrick Dvoracek.

There are plenty of losses on the defensive side of the ball after a strong '09 campaign. The linebacking corps benefits from the return of senior Theo Smith, while up front, end Troy Evans had 6.5 sacks last season.

The defensive backfield is led by junior safety Darius Prelow (12 pass breakups in '09).

8 NORTH TEXAS MEAN GREEN

It may not be occurring as quickly as some in the Mean Green community would like, but North Texas is improving, and those steps forward could produce some tangible results in 2010.

Although QB Riley Dodge has been moved to receiver after suffering multiple injuries, new coordinator Mike Canales was encouraged during the spring by the play of senior Nathan Tune, who proved reliable in seven games last year. Sophomore Derek Thompson could also grab the job with a strong offseason.

Whoever wins will throw to a bunch of proven wideouts, most notably Jamaal Jackson (71 receptions), although North Texas still needs a deep threat. Oklahoma transfer Tyler Stradford will try to fill the void.

The ground game already has its home run hitter. Lance Dunbar averaged 147.5 yards during his eight games as a starter and finished with 17 touchdowns. He'll work behind a line led by tackles Esteban Santiago and Victor Gill and guard Kelvin Drake.

The real work comes on defense, where the Mean Green were particularly weak last year. The linebacking corps should be the deepest of the unit thanks to senior Craig Robertson, but the front four needs to get better quickly and add depth.

Safety DaWaylon Cook and corner Royce Hill lead an experienced backfield, but improved production is a must there.

9 WESTERN KENTUCKY HILLTOPPERS

New coach Willie Taggart, who was a standout QB for the Hilltoppers in the mid-1990s, is making a bunch of changes now that he's in charge, going from the spread attack to a West Coast offense and from a 3-4 defense to a 4-3 alignment.

However, Taggart also understands that making significant strides in the Sun Belt, given the program's FBS youth, will take time—a lot of time.

Every job was wide open during the spring, so count on a bunch of new faces making contributions throughout the 2010 season. The biggest should be under center, where early enrollee and junior college transfer Matt Pelesasa took over in the spring after 2009 starter Kawaun Jakes injured his ankle in an off-field mishap.

Pelesasa will work with a quartet of targets in receivers Marcus Vasquez, Derrius Brooks and Quinterrance Cooper and tight end Jack Doyle. On the ground, junior Bobby Rainey looked strong running the football after a solid '09 campaign. Right tackle Preston King leads an experienced line.

The Hilltoppers couldn't stop anybody last year, partly because they were so young. Expect senior Thomas Majors to handle the middle linebacker position, with support on the outside from sophomore Josh Carter. Up front, junior Jared Clendenin anchors a unit that needs to get nastier against the run, while sophomore safety Kareem Peterson and the rest of the secondary must show major improvement.

Broncos should live up to expectations that have never been greater

By Chadd Cripe, Idaho Statesman

As much as Boise State has dominated the WAC in recent years, the Broncos often enter a new season either as a close favorite or the second choice in preseason polls.

Not this year.

The Broncos will be everyone's pick to win their eighth WAC championship in nine years—a title that holds strong implications inside the locker room but may mean little to the rest of college football this year.

For the Broncos, the outside world expects an undefeated regular season and perhaps a shot at the national title; the rest is just formality. They return 22 of their 24 Fiesta Bowl starters and have had a single one-point loss in the past two years.

Coach Chris Petersen doesn't like the hype.

"I like the underdog status," he says. "I think it's a better position to operate from. It's getting harder and harder for us to do that."

It's also getting harder and harder for the rest of the WAC to catch up. The Broncos have lost just two league games in the past eight years—dominance that has contributed to a rash of coaching shakeups elsewhere.

The team with the best shot at knocking off the Broncos appears to be Nevada. The Wolf Pack have fallen behind early and rallied to give the Broncos a fight in each of the past three years. They'll play Boise State in Reno this season and also have senior quarterback Colin Kaepernick making his fourth start against the WAC rival, but they must fix a problematic defense.

Fresno State, which returns its entire offensive line, could also make a run. But the Bulldogs have to visit Bronco Stadium, which is coach Pat Hill's house of horrors.

RECRUITING ROUNDUP

By Jeremy Crabtree, Rivals.com

1. FRESNO STATE The Bulldogs landed one of the top classes outside the power conferences with a crop of talented California skill players such as receivers Davon Dunn, Victor Dean Jr. and Joshua Harper.

2. HAWAII The Warriors did well again in their own backyard, landing quality players such as Zachary Quines and Dustin Elisara. But the job Hawaii did with players outside the state makes it one of the league's best classes.

3. BOISE STATE Boise State signed one of the nation's smallest classes, but it was large on talent. Tyrone Crawford is one of the nation's best junior college defenders, and quarterback Grant Hedrick could be the next great passer for the Broncos.

4. NEW MEXICO STATE The Aggies did a nice job on the junior college front, scoring one of the best defensive linemen around in David Mahoney. They also signed standout offensive tackle Aundre McGaskey from JC national champion Blinn.

5. NEVADA A mixture of in-state and California talent helps populate the Wolf Pack's class. Kyle Roberts from Sparks, Nev., was a huge steal. Devon Rosa from Glendale CC could be special in the WAC.

6. IDAHO The Vandals scoured the western half of the country and scored their best class in a long time. Ben Swartz is a talented defensive tackle from the junior college ranks, and receiver Mitchell Crockum is a good get from Alhambra, Calif.

7. LOUISIANA TECH Local quarterback Taylor Burch, an early commitment, is the headliner of the class. Tech also loaded up with quality defensive players.

8. SAN JOSE STATE Defensive back Bene Bewikere from Gardena (Calif.) Serra, who could have played at a number of Pac-10 schools, was a huge steal for the Spartans. Junior college quarterback Matt Faulkner could be the Spartans' leader for the next two years.

9. UTAH STATE The Aggies did better than their ranking reflects. Utah State scored several quality in-state targets such as Taani Fisilau, Jason Fanaika and Keegan Andersen. All three could have played in the Mountain West or for some Pac-10 schools.

FOUR FEARLESS FORECASTS

1 Boise State may not fall, but they'll stumble in the WAC—likely in unexpected places such as Las Cruces or San Jose.

2 Either Chris Ault or Pat Hill—maybe both—will be gone in 2011. The Nevada and Fresno State coaches have 38 combined seasons of experience but both are under fire for not winning conference titles.

3 Kellen Moore will be a Heisman Trophy candidate. The Boise State quarterback should have been invited to New York in 2009 after passing for 39 touchdowns and only three interceptions.

4 The WAC will win more than three games against major nonconference foes. With 18 all-league players returning, those marquee games are winnable.

ASCENDING

LOUISIANA TECH ➤ New coach Sonny Dykes inherits a team that was better than its 4-8 record last year, and he returns 16 starters.

DESCENDING

IDAHO ➤ The Vandals were a major surprise with a bowl win in 2009. However, they allowed 43 more points than they scored and must rebuild a once-powerful offensive line.

ROSE BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING BRENELE MYERS, OT

Myers made his second career start (and first at tackle) in the Fiesta Bowl and kept TCU standout defensive end Jerry Hughes at bay. The sophomore then followed that with a strong spring.

KELLEN MOORE, QB

starters from January's Fiesta Bowl upset of TCU—making this the most experienced, deepest and perhaps best team produced by a WAC program that has won seven league titles, 89.5 percent of its games and two Fiesta Bowls since 2002.

Coach Chris Petersen, who is 49-4 in four seasons with two Bear Bryant awards, acknowledges the outside pressure put on this year's team to perform, but he prefers the underdog role that has fueled the Broncos in the past.

"We can't let the expectations derail us," he says. "We can't pay too close attention to those things. We've got to pay attention to our own expectations, and we've got to let our own expectations drive us and push us and hopefully make us the best we can possibly be."

For the second straight year, the Broncos will open the season in the national spotlight. They beat Oregon 19-8 last year in Boise on the first Thursday of the season. This time, they'll face Virginia Tech on Labor Day at FedEx Field in Landover, Md.

The offense returns all but two significant players: fullback Richie Brockel, the starter until a foot injury ended his season in November, and right guard Kevin Sapien, who retired because of longstanding neck and shoulder injuries.

Junior quarterback Kellen Moore

Eight years of unparalleled success have put Boise State in position to rock the college sports world in 2010.

The Broncos are considered a top-five team going into the season. And with games scheduled against Virginia Tech and Oregon State, they'll get two chances to prove they're worthy of such a lofty ranking.

The Broncos return 22 of the 24 finished seventh in Heisman Trophy voting last year and has a strong shot at reaching New York in 2010. He ranked second in passing efficiency (161.65) with an absurd 39 touchdown passes against three interceptions.

Moore's arsenal will be deep and fast with the return of All-WAC seniors Austin Pettis (14 TD catches) and Titus Young (10 TDs). Slot receivers Kirby Moore (Kellen's brother) and Tyler Shoemaker are back as well.

The backfield features the electric Jeremy Avery (1,151 yards rushing) and the powerful Doug Martin (15 TDs), as well as D.J. Harper, who led the team in rushing (6.5 yards per carry) until a torn ACL ended his 2009 season.

Moore will also look for tight ends Tommy Gallarda (4 TDs) and Kyle Efaw (Fiesta Bowl Offensive MVP) and full-back Dan Paul (3 TD catches against Nevada). He has some new targets at wide receiver in freshmen Geraldo Hiwat and Aaron Burks and tight end in sophomore Chandler Koch.

All of that skill will rely on a rebuilt offensive line that should be the Broncos' best since 2006. The line, which was a weakness two years ago, took a big step in 2009 by allowing an NCAA-low five sacks.

The defense lost only one significant contributor in starting cornerback Kyle Wilson. Both players vying for his spot—junior Jerrell Gavins and sophomore Jamar Taylor—have game experience, so that loss isn't a major concern.

The four returning to the secondary could transform this unit into a dominant defense with a few refinements. Cornerback Brandyn Thompson (team-high 6 INTs, Fiesta Bowl Defensive MVP) needs to improve his consistency, safety Jeron Johnson (team-high 91 tackles) could be a better tackler, safety George Iloka needs to make a few more big plays and nickel Winston Venable could be a better defender in man-to-man coverage.

At linebacker, co-starters Aaron Tevis and J.C. Percy return on the weak side. Senior Derrell Acree enjoyed an outstanding spring and could have a breakout year in the middle, where he'll get help from former end Byron Hout and Daron Mackey, who emerged as the starter last year before a torn ACL derailed him.

The line should be the strength of the defense. End Ryan Winterswyk (9 sacks) is a two-time All-WAC first-teamer, while fellow end Shea McClellin has developed into a versatile force that also plays linebacker in some packages. Tackles Billy Winn and Chase Baker plug the middle. Winn causes problems for offenses with his quickness, which was proven last year with 12.5 tackles for loss.

RECRUITING REPORT

Boise State signed one of the nation's smallest classes with only 10 players, but it was large on talent. Tyrone Crawford is one of the nation's best junior college defenders, and he stuck to his commitment after being placed in a JC by BSU. Quarterback Grant Hedrick could be the next great passer for the Broncos. He fits perfectly with what Boise State coaches want from their signal-callers. Matt Miller is a versatile athlete who could play on either side of the ball. He was a huge get against quality Pac-10 programs.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

The Wolf Pack's defense dominated the spring game—a hopeful sign for a program that has struggled in that department for years.

In fact, the defense was the source of some offseason controversy. Rumors suggest that coach Chris Ault could be fired if the Pack, who lost the WAC title game at Boise State last year, don't improve in 2010.

But any frustration with this team is aimed squarely at a defense that allowed 35 points to Notre Dame, 44 to Boise State and 45 to SMU in the Hawaii Bowl. The Pack ranked 96th in the nation in total defense—sliding five spots from 2008 after Ault resolved to fix the unit.

So once again, the defense will be the key in determining whether the Pack are good enough to dethrone Boise State as WAC champion.

Andy Buh, formerly the co-defensive coordinator at Stanford, has been charged with the daunting task. He'll work with six returning starters, including WAC Defensive Player of the Year Dontay Moch and second-team All-WAC linebacker James-Michael Johnson, and an impressive infusion of talent.

Junior college transfer Willie Faataualofa is expected to compete for a starting job at tackle when he arrives in the fall. He could be a nice complement to Moch, who recorded 6.5 sacks last year but might draw more blockers this season with the early departure of Kevin Basped (9.5 sacks) to the NFL.

Johnson tied for sixth in the WAC last year with 11.5 tackles for loss. He moves from the outside to middle linebacker, where he could put up huge numbers. He likely will get help from another juco transfer in linebacker DeAndre Boughton.

The back end also has some up-and-coming playmakers. Local product Duke Williams started two games at safety as a true freshman and is considered a rising star. Corbin Louks, who is a former Utah quarterback, may get the other safety spot.

Meanwhile, the offense is loaded with proven talent that scored 38.2 points per game and rushed for an NCAA-best 344.9 yards per game using the unique "pistol" formation and the abilities of quarterback Colin Kaepernick, the 2008 WAC Offensive Player of the Year.

Still, the group has yet to live up to its potential. That's because the passing game hasn't been effective against teams capable of slowing the rushing attack and forcing Kaepernick to throw the ball.

Kaepernick, for all of his accolades, has gone winless in three bowls, four regular-season games against BCS teams and three games against the eventual WAC champions. He increased his efficiency rating by seven points in 2009 but still ranked fourth in the WAC and completed just 58.9 percent of his passes.

Louisiana Tech's frustrating search for a passing attack has a new urgency this season as new coach Sonny Dykes and offensive coordinator Tony Franklin take over in Ruston with dreams of a Mike Leach-style offense.

That means getting production at quarterback, but that's something that has been elusive since a tremendous run under former Bulldogs quarterbacks Tim Rattay and Luke McCown.

Since McCown's career ended in 2003, the Bulldogs have posted a 115.06 efficiency rating over six seasons with the likes of Ross Jenkins, Zac Champion, Taylor Bennett and Matt Kubik under center. The meager passing stats—no seasons with 2,800 passing yards or 20 touchdown passes—led to the firing of coach Jack Bicknell after the 2006 season and contributed to the Bulldogs' disappointing 4-8 record last year.

This time, though, the coach left on his own. Derek Dooley, who led the Bulldogs to the Independence Bowl title in 2008, has taken over the program at Tennessee. That opened the door for Dykes, who most recently held the offensive coordinator job at Arizona.

He has entrusted the offense to Franklin, a spread-attack specialist who has left a trail of humbled defenses in his wake. Franklin helped Middle Tennessee to its first bowl win last year after a brief stint at Auburn and two conference titles at Troy—all as offensive coordinator.

He expects to build a similar offense at Louisiana Tech, regardless of recent history.

"We will run a fast-paced, no huddle, attacking offense that scores points and builds excitement," Franklin says.

Franklin's first task is to identify and develop a quarterback. Auburn transfer Steven Ensminger, who languished on the depth chart as a tight end for part of last season, made a move in spring ball and will challenge Jenkins.

This might also be a good time to shift away from the run-first offense of Dooley. The Bulldogs lost star tailback Daniel Porter and tight end Dennis Morris, but they expect to have depth at wide receiver and a versatile backfield.

The offensive star should be senior wide receiver Phillip Livas, who seems like a perfect fit in the slot. Livas is the only active player in the country with touchdowns from 70-plus yards on a reception, carry, punt return and kickoff return in his career. Sophomore Richie Casey is Livas-like and could join him in the slot, while LSU transfer Tim Molton, Tennessee transfer Ahmad Paige and junior R.P. Stuart are likely to contribute on the outside.

The backfield includes another Tennessee transfer, Lennon Creer.

THE NEXT BIG THING TIM MOLTON, WR

Molton redshirted at LSU in 2008 and transferred to Tech last year after sustaining a serious knee injury in Baton Rouge. Now fully recovered, he should be the deep threat in the new offense.

The Vandals produced a breakthrough season in 2009 with eight wins, including a thrilling Humanitarian Bowl triumph over Bowling Green.

They also produced All-America offensive guard and NFL first-round draft pick Mike Iupati.

However, replacing the latter will be critical to repeating the former, because the Vandals lost most of the offensive line that was the key to their success.

Nearly everywhere else on the roster, Idaho has experience and depth.

The offense returns five starters, including quarterback Nathan Enderle (fifth in the nation in pass efficiency), running back Princeton McCarty (5.9 yards per carry) and wide receiver Maurice Shaw (6 TDs, 20.8 yards-per-catch average). Daniel Hardy (17.7 yards per catch in 2009) is a big-play option at tight end, and coaches hope left tackle Matt Cleveland can lead the inexperienced line. The Vandals finished ninth in the nation in total offense last year at 451 yards per game.

Ten starters return to a defense that allowed 433.2 yards per contest and ranked 116th in the nation in pass defense (278.1 yards per game). Also, the group was unable to effectively pressure the quarterback, generating just 15 sacks and 15 turnovers for the year.

Standout safety Shiloh Keo recorded 113 tackles last season to finish second in the league and earn first-team All-WAC honors. End Aaron Lavarias and tackle Jonah Sataraka are emerging stars who combined for eight of the team's 15 sacks in 2009. Cornerbacks Kenneth Patten and Isaac Butts need to make more plays, as they combined for just one interception a year ago.

Among most observers, Pat Hill is considered one of the top coaches in college football. He has won 68 percent of his games and produced 10 bowl berths in the past 11 years. But in Fresno, Hill's status is the subject of much debate. His teams have lost at least two WAC games in all of his 13 seasons and haven't won a title since landing in a three-way tie at the top in 1999.

This year's Bulldogs, like many of Hill's recent teams, will enter the season with reason to believe they can contend for the WAC title despite a heavy dose of skepticism from the outside.

The offense should again be strong with five returning starters on the line, enviable depth at quarterback and a bunch of inexperienced talent joining the explosive Devon Wylie (4 TDs on 17 catches in an injury-plagued junior year) and steady Jamel Hamler (37 catches) at wideout. At tailback, the diminutive but shifty Robbie Rouse (5.8 yards per carry) will try to replace game-breaker Ryan Mathews, who left early for the NFL.

The lingering question is at quarterback, where junior Ryan Colburn outperformed former Fresno great David Carr as a first-year starter. But fans are still asking for his backup, Derek Carr, David's younger brother. Carr received spot duty as a true freshman in 2009 and could redshirt this year if Colburn emerges as the starter.

The defense is where the Bulldogs need work. They allowed six yards per carry last season and forced just 15 turnovers. The defensive staff visited TCU seeking answers and will implement changes that they hope will fix the problems. Nine starters return, including All-WAC players Chris Carter at end and Ben Jacobs at linebacker.

6 UTAH STATE AGGIES

The Aggies showed promise last season in their first year under Gary Andersen. In fact, they finished 4-8 with four losses by eight points or fewer—a collection that included heartbreakers against Nevada and Fresno State.

And with 18 starters returning this season, including quarterback Diondre Borel and first-team All-WAC linebacker Bobby Wagner, the Aggies could contend for a bowl berth this year.

However, Utah State took a painful hit during offseason conditioning when tailback Robert Turbin (1,714 combined yards) suffered a torn ACL. His chances of getting a second redshirt year are dicey, so he hopes to return sometime in October.

Turbin is the perfect complement to the elusive Borel, who spreads defenses thin with his mobility. Borel isn't always accurate, but he has a knack for creating big plays and avoiding mistakes. He helped the Aggies set school records for total offensive yards and fewest interceptions (4) in a season.

State's most significant hole is at wide receiver, where top target Stanley Morrison returns, but three other key contributors are gone. Among the new faces expected to step up are Dontel Watkins and Matt Austin, a junior college transfer who missed last season with a broken foot.

Nine starters return on defense, but there's plenty of work to be done on a unit that allowed at least 49 points in three of the last four games. Andersen built the defense on speed but didn't have the size to go with it, allowing 205.5 rushing yards and 34 points per game. Fixing the defense, and finding a replacement for Turbin, will be the keys to the season.

7 NEW MEXICO STATE AGGIES

The Aggies were the worst offensive team in the FBS last year, producing 11.5 points and 229.3 yards per game. They went four games without an offensive touchdown and were the only non-option team to pass for fewer than 90 yards per game.

Still, they managed a 3-3 start before collapsing with seven straight losses to end the year, when coach DeWayne Walker's defense started to look like his offense.

Eighteen starters return this year, and the Aggies hired new offensive coordinator Mike Dunbar, whose previous stops as a coordinator include Northwestern, California and Minnesota. Dunbar's challenge will be cobbling together a passing attack with a quarterback lacking on-field prowess. Veteran signal-callers Jeff Fleming and Trevor Walls or perhaps junior college transfer Matt Christian will vie for the starting job.

The quarterback will stand behind three returning offensive linemen and will hand the ball to Seth Smith, who plowed his way to 1,016 yards rushing last season and five 100-yard games.

Senior cornerback Davon House highlights the defense. The first-team All-WAC honoree is outstanding in man coverage and had three interceptions, 13 pass breakups and two touchdowns last season. He was the reason the Aggies ranked third in the WAC in pass-efficiency defense, the lone bright spot on an otherwise sorry stat sheet. Walker needs to rebuild the middle of the defense after losing all of his starting linebackers. House and an intact secondary should get help from promising junior ends Pierre Fils and Donte Savage, who combined for 13 sacks last season.

The Warriors won four in a row late last season but still finished 6-7 and missed their hometown bowl. However, the four-game streak instilled some confidence in a team that started a walk-on at quarterback for much of the year.

This time, the Warriors hope to get a boost from that late-season charge. Junior Bryant Moniz returns at quarterback. A full offseason as the starter should help him improve his accuracy and efficiency. In a run-and-shoot offense that requires the quarterback and receivers to make the same reads, the QB will benefit from three big-play receivers in All-WAC pick Greg Salas (106 catches), Kealoha Pilaes (66) and Rodney Bradley, who averaged 18.5 yards per catch before a broken leg ended his season.

Concerns on offense come on the line, with four departures, including four-year starting center John Estes. The offense as a whole must get better in the red zone, where the Warriors were the nation's worst team last year.

On defense, seven starters return from a group that was awful for much of the year and produced just one All-WAC player in departed linebacker Blaze Soares. Still, there's some talent in the group, led by defensive tackle Vaughn Meatoga and safeties Mana Silva (WAC-high 6 INTs) and Richard Torres. The linebacker corps was wiped out, but converted safety Aaron Brown is expected to make a significant impact there.

Former Hawaii quarterback Nick Rolovich, who handled play-calling duties for most of 2009 and sparked an increase in production, has taken over as offensive coordinator. Dave Aranda has grabbed the reins of the defense from coach Greg McMackin.

San Jose State's quest for points took a bizarre turn during the offseason. The Spartans, who scored 165 points last year, hired Duke defensive coordinator Mike MacIntyre to replace Dick Tomey as head coach. MacIntyre then hired Hugh Freeze as offensive coordinator, only to lose him to Arkansas State after two months because of a family issue that pushed Freeze closer to home. That left the Spartans without an offensive coordinator for the first couple weeks of spring ball. Finally, after spring break, MacIntyre promoted special teams coach Tim Landis to offensive coordinator.

Landis—a former head coach at Bucknell, Davidson and Saint Mary's—steps into a more difficult spot than MacIntyre, as the offense has struggled for years and the return of nine offensive starters doesn't mean the drought will end in 2010. Four linemen with at least 10 career starts return, as do quarterback Jordan La Secla and wide receivers Marquis Avery and Jalal Beauchman and running backs Lamon Muldrow and Brandon Rutley.

One big problem is that La Secla threw more interceptions (11) than touchdown passes (10) last season, and the linemen and running backs produced a meager 2.6 yards per carry.

The defense, which returns seven starters, has issues, too. The group was the strength of the program until about mid-way through the 2009 season when the defense had carried the load for one too many games. Injuries and fatigue devastated the unit, which allowed 414 points last year. The line and linebacker corps must be rebuilt, with junior lineman Pablo Garcia and senior linebacker Pompey Festejo expected to excel.

CHAMPS SPORTS BOWL

THE NEXT BIG THING THEO RIDDICK, WR

There's a reason Riddick was moved from running back to slot receiver. Fighting Irish coach Brian Kelly sees something special in freshman running back Cierre Wood. Now only time will tell if a big-play back can exist in the spread offense.

To aid Kelly's transition, some of last year's key players return, but there are still many holes on the roster.

Kelly, who disdains the concept of a depth chart, will first and foremost have to wrestle with the lack of depth at quarterback.

There's junior Dayne Crist, who has thrown 20 passes (10 completions, 130 yards, 1 TD, 1 interception) in his

The helmets are still gold. But beyond that fixture, the make-over of the Notre Dame football program under new coach Brian Kelly has been extensive.

The pro-style attack on offense favored by former coach Charlie Weis—and former quarterback Jimmy Clausen—has fizzled away, leaving Kelly's signature quick-strike spread offense in vogue. This new strategy requires an amped, uptempo pace that few teams will be able to match.

The defense has said goodbye to the 4-3 and hello to a 3-4 scheme. In this new era, coordinator Bob Diaco is committed to shutting down the run.

Kelly has even instilled a new philosophy. The attempt to run a college program on a professional, NFL-like daily timetable didn't fare well under Weis. Last year, players routinely finished their football obligations—meetings, practice, media and study table, along with dinner—after 10 p.m. Kelly has restructured his players' days to allow them a couple hours "to be college students."

It all sounds good, and Kelly's history of success at Division II power Grand Valley State, Central Michigan and Cincinnati gives his comprehensive plan credibility. But executing it at one of the most visible college football venues in the country will be a test, especially since Kelly rarely had legions of fans and media dissecting and analyzing every move and reading between every line previously. Still, face value is not good enough at Notre Dame.

collegiate career. Beyond Crist, however, the backup slot is wide open.

And even Crist isn't a sure thing, as he's coming off ACL surgery from an injury last Halloween against Washington State—the last time the Irish tasted victory during their 6-6 disappointment in 2009.

Walk-on Nate Montana (Joe's oldest son) got a shot as backup quarterback in the spring. Likewise, freshman Tommy Rees was able to test-drive the new playbook. By August, rookies Andrew Hendrix and Luke Massa will have had a hands-on opportunity to learn the new offense.

How that glut of new faces shakes out will be critical to the season.

"There has to be a comfort level where he (the quarterback) and the offense are comfortable with each other," says Kelly of his eventual starter.

Remember, this is the coach who used five quarterbacks during Cincinnati's 12-0 regular-season run last year.

Another lean area on offense is tackle. Matt Romine, Taylor Dever and Zach Martin have nothing more than cameo appearances to show for their Notre Dame careers.

As a result, Kelly is counting on a wealth of returning interior linemen—center Dan Wenger and guards Chris Stewart and Trevor Robinson—along with Braxton Cave, Mike Golic Jr., Andrew Nuss and Chris Watt, who could all shift to tackle at some point.

Michael Floyd is the big-time component of the receiving corps. Sophomore Theo Riddick was moved from running back to slot receiver to add punch to the passing game, thus making room for Cierre Wood, Armando Allen, Jonas Gray and Robert Hughes at running back.

Other options at receiver will be returnees Duval Kamara, John Goodman, Deion Walker, Shaquell Evans and Roby Toma, along with freshman Tai-ler Jones.

Kyle Rudolph, Mike Ragone, Bobby Burger, Tyler Eifert and Jake Golic offer different options and styles at tight end.

One reason for the trimming at offensive tackle was so defensive end could get a boost. Diaco's ideal defensive front is based on beef. Notre Dame was hurting for size at end, so 6-5, 290-pound Lane Clelland was moved from tackle to end, along with Kapron Lewis-Moore, Ethan Johnson and Sean Cwynar.

Nose guard is a crowded area, with Ian Williams, Hafis Williams, Brandon Newman and Tyler Stockton all in the mix for playing time.

Like end, the Irish needed more muscle at inside linebacker. Steve Paskorz, who never managed to make an impression in three years at fullback, gets a shot at the middle along with David Posluszny, Manti Te'o's (a heralded recruit a year ago), Carlo Calabrese and Anthony McDonald.

At least outside linebacker boasts some talent, led by locker-room leader Brian Smith, Darius Fleming and Kerry Neal.

Safety, however, is an area of concern. Harrison Smith is the best hope for stability, but he struggled last year, switching from safety to linebacker at midseason. Now he's back in the secondary. Veterans Darrin Walls, Robert Blanton and Gary Gray have the inside track at cornerback.

—Al Lesar

BOWL PROJECTION

POINSETTIA BOWL

With 10 victories, a 35-13 Texas Bowl win over Missouri, wins against Notre Dame in two of the last three years, a No. 26 ranking in the final poll and dominance over Army, these are the glory days of Navy football.

Entering his third season at the helm of the Midshipmen, Ken Niumatalolo has a nucleus in place to build on the success achieved in his first two seasons (18-10).

What makes the last campaign so impressive was that three of the team's losses—Ohio State, Temple and Hawaii—were by a combined 46 points.

These Midshipmen know how to compete.

"We don't worry about the end result," Niumatalolo says. "We worry about the process of getting there. That is how we've always done it."

The place to start in Navy's triple-option offense is quarterback. And Ricky Dobbs is back after a phenomenal 2009 (1,203 yards, 27 rushing TDs; 1,031 yards, 6 passing TDs).

He is Navy's "Magic Man."

The explosive Dobbs is entering his third year as Navy's starting quarterback, and his knowledge of the offense makes him a dangerous weapon.

He'll make use of returning slotbacks Marcus Curry and Gee Gee Greene and fullback Vince Murray, who combined for 1,809 rushing yards last season. Curry was Navy's top receiver in '09, with 10 receptions for 287 yards.

The Midshipmen offense was the fourth-best rushing attack in the country (280.5 yards a game) thanks to a dependable line blocking for those talented skill players.

Matt Molloy (right) and Jeff Battipaglia (left) were regulars at tackle last year and will see significant time there again. Center Eric Douglass and guard David Hong received spot starts last year and won't be coming in cold this season.

Inside linebacker Tyler Simmons, who ranked third on the team with 68 tackles last season, will have to step into the "eliminator" role that Ross Pospisil (107 tackles) played last year when the Midshipmen ranked 34th in the country in total defense (335.2 yards a game).

Inside linebacker Caleb King and defensive end Billy Yarborough both lack experience. But the secondary is strong and dependable with Wyatt Middleton (rover), Emmett Merchant (free safety) and Kevin Edwards (cornerback).

Chase Burge returns after starting six games at nose tackle in '09 and will battle Shane Bothel there.

If there's one defender on track to reach an elite level, it's end Jabaree Tuani. The 6-1, 265-pound junior had 54 tackles and 3.5 sacks last year and shows no signs of slowing down.

5-YEAR WINS TREND

THE NEXT BIG THING
JARED HASSIN, FB

With his speed, size and explosiveness, this 6-3, 218-pound sophomore will add another dimension to the Army offense.

ARMY
BLACK KNIGHTS

Rich Ellerson was hired as the head football coach at Army before the 2009 season with a mandate to stop the bleeding. Despite some progress with a 5-7 campaign, Army increased its record to 13 losing seasons.

Now the honeymoon is over and the leader of the Black Knights seems poised to turn things around. Where it goes from here will be the measure of the program.

"We have last year at our backs. We know what the physical environment is, it's very challenging," Ellerson says. "We are on track to (end the losing streak). I really believe in the things we are doing and the progress we are making."

If the Black Knights are able to put things together this season, they'll have sophomore quarterback Trent Steelman to thank for it. Steelman will navigate Army's challenging triple-option offense—a daunting task for any young quarterback.

"He is much more comfortable in a leadership role, much more comfortable running the offense," Ellerson says of Steelman. "The reactions and decisions that go along with that position are all so much more intuitive for him."

To help Steelman orchestrate the offensive activity, the Black Knights will surround him with some quality athletes. Patrick Mealy and Jameson Carter provide experience in the backfield, while newcomer Jared Hassin has the potential to add explosiveness.

Even though the Army offense is predicated on the run, receiver Davyd Brooks will be a threat catching the ball.

Army's defense, ranked 16th in the country last season, will have eight starters back, fortified by linebackers Stephen Anderson and Andrew Rodriguez, who led the Black Knights in tackles (85) last season. Steve Erzinger will be a factor on the outside.

Ellerson has also tinkered with some personnel to improve depth.

Kingsley Ehie was converted from fullback to middle linebacker just in case Anderson, who is returning from a late-season knee injury, is slow to progress. So far, Ehie's impact has been positive.

Defensive back Donovan Travis, who led Army with four interceptions last season, is the stabilizing influence in the secondary. Defensive tackle Mike Gann, whose father (by the same name) played the same position at Notre Dame and for nine years in the NFL, will anchor the defensive line.

Jonathan Bulls has the punting job nailed down, but kicking duties could come down to a battle between last year's regular, Alex Carlton, and Matt Campbell.

FCS OVERVIEW

Opportunity knocks

The FCS looks to continue its growing popularity with an expanded postseason and new location and date for the championship game.

By Matt McKenzie, Assistant Editor

Last year's semifinal game between Appalachian State and Montana—a 24-17 thriller that came down to the last play against the backdrop of a snowstorm—was the highest-rated FCS playoff broadcast in cable history.

And with numerous changes coming to the postseason in 2010, the hope is more college football fans will continue to be attracted to the division formerly known as I-AA, which is the highest NCAA level to use a playoff to determine its football champion.

This year, the FCS playoffs will be expanded from 16 teams to 20, with the Big South and NEC now gaining automatic qualifying bids. The Division I Football Championship Game will also switch locations, leaving Chattanooga, Tenn., for Frisco, Texas. Finally, the game shifts from mid-December to Jan. 7, three nights before the BCS Championship Game.

"I know some people will look at the changes as a 'glass half-empty,' but I personally look at that glass half or even three-quarters full," says Damani Leech, the NCAA director for baseball and football. "We now have a lot of opportunity to grow the championship."

Leech says talks about expanding the playoffs have been ongoing for several years, given the disproportionate ratio between the size of the former bracket and the growing number of members in the FCS.

"Among the NCAA sports, our playoff is one of the more difficult to get into," Leech says. "All eligible conferences that applied for an (automatic qualifying bid) did not get one. The NEC had applied for years and was eligible, but was not able to get one. So that was really the impetus of the movement, to accommodate that."

"For the teams previously on the outside looking in, they now get a chance to be under the tent and in the championship, so to speak, even if it's just for one game. But the beauty is you really don't know how things are going to go until you play the games."

But not everyone is sold on the new format.

"To be truthful, not really," says Appalachian State coach Jerry Moore when asked if he was in favor of the change. "There were always a group of teams that feel like they were left out, but I liked the 16-team (format), felt it was right. ... I guess I just had a comfort zone with it."

"The next four teams they let in, are they going to bring that much to it? That's what I want to know. You want to showcase the top teams in the conference in the playoffs, and I just don't want anything to detract from where (the FCS) has gotten to be."

The new format will have 12 teams (with the top five seeded) receiving a first-round bye, with the remaining eight playing in the first round. There will now be 10 automatic qualifier bids, leaving 10 at-large spots. The start of the playoffs remains the same, with the first round taking place over Thanksgiving weekend.

With the additional round, it would have put the title game during Christmas weekend, which Leech acknowledges was not going to work. Discussions were held with ESPN (which televises the contest), and the decision was made to shift the date into January. Leech adds that the break in between the semifinals and championship game will give fans a better opportunity to make travel plans to attend.

For the first time in 14 years, the championship won't be in Chattanooga's Finley Stadium. The NCAA's contract with Chattanooga ran out in 2009, and bids were then taken from potential host cities. From the five that submitted bids, the finalists were narrowed down to Chattanooga and Frisco.

Those two cities then made presentations to the FCS playoff committee, and one member called Frisco's "one of the best I've ever seen."

"There's a lot of potential in the Frisco area," says Jim O'Day, a member of the 10-man committee and Montana's athletic director. "We know how football is seriously viewed in the state of Texas. Their facilities are outstanding, and they were really organized in their bid."

The game will take place at Pizza Hut Park, the home of Major League Soccer's FC Dallas. It seats nearly 21,200 (about equal to Finley Stadium), but the hope is Frisco can draw more fans with its close proximity to the Dallas-Fort Worth metropolitan area.

However, there are a few potential roadblocks with the sweeping new changes. While the new location is nearer to the center of the country, it could pose a longer travel time for most FCS schools.

"There's a good 75 to 80 percent of our membership that's located east of the Mississippi, so we're fully aware that we're moving away from a larger population of schools," Leech says. "But we also realize that with bracket expansion and the date change, it provides an opportunity for schools to ramp up support for their fans."

The Division I championship game will also take place the same night as the Cotton Bowl at Cowboys Stadium. Leech says there's some concern about the two games going head-to-head, but not enough to move the date.

"We certainly don't want to cannibalize the college football audience," says Leech, who adds that the plans for the Division I championship game are to kick off about an hour before the Cotton Bowl. "But the Dallas-Fort Worth area has about 6.5 million people. We're looking for 20,000 to show up (in Frisco), so I think there's enough room there for both games."

And when the fans do show up, it wouldn't be a surprise if they saw the same two teams from last year's championship game, Villanova and Montana.

The Wildcats, who won their first FCS title last year, return 14 starters—a number that coach Andy Talley hopes to increase by one.

The player in question is all-purpose athlete Matt Szczur, who rushed for a career-high 159 yards and two touchdowns and added 68 receiving yards in the championship game. Last year, Szczur scored touchdowns via passing, rushing, receiving and kick returns.

The 5-11, 195-pound senior captured both the CAA's Offensive Player and Special Teams Player of the Year last season. But while Szczur is a football star, he is just as good (if not better) at baseball. At press time, Szczur, who plays outfield for Villanova's baseball team, was among the NCAA's top 15 hitters and has the potential to be an early-round pick in June's MLB amateur draft.

"I think if he gets offered a large amount of money, he would probably go," Talley says. "If he does decide to come back, that'd be great. He's a difference-maker, a super player—the best I've had since Brian Westbrook."

Regardless of Szczur's decision, Villanova has quality players in quarterback Chris Whitney and All-America selections in offensive tackle Ben Ijalana and linebacker Terence Thomas.

"The big question mark is, how do we respond carrying the title of national champion and what will that do to our program?" says Talley, who is entering his 26th season with the Wildcats. "Whatever the X-factor was last year, we had it. We weren't going to go away. You had to beat us; we weren't going to beat ourselves."

"Will that carry over now that we're national champions? That's the question. We really won't know until we get to the field, but I have a feeling we still have that intangible. I feel we can fill the spots."

Of course, the Wildcats will have to first make their way through the Colonial, arguably the FCS' toughest conference. Six teams from the CAA are ranked in Sporting News' Top 25, and the league now boasts back-to-back champions (Richmond won the title in 2008).

"The toughest thing for us is to get out of our own league and survive that," Talley says. "Anyone who can survive our league and get to the playoffs, because of the tremendous parity in the league, you really set yourself up for the postseason. If we can be really competitive in the CAA, I think we'll have a shot at repeating."

Montana's appearance in the championship game last year was its second straight and fifth in the last 10 years. But a week after losing in the title contest, coach Bobby Hauck left for UNLV. The school promoted from within, moving wide receivers coach Robin Pflugrad to the top spot. With quarterback Andrew Selle and All-America running back

Chase Reynolds back along with a defense that's notoriously tough to hang points on, expect the Grizzlies to again make noise this postseason.

Although Moore loses all-world quarterback Armanti Edwards, the Mountaineers need to replace just four other starters and have a strong contingent of star players returning on both sides of the ball.

Even with two additional automatic bids and four new teams overall, it's a decent bet the national champion will come out of the Colonial or Southern, as teams from those leagues have captured the title in nine of the last 11 years.

Hauck's departure won't slow the Grizz's show

By Mike Sorensen
The (Salt Lake City) Deseret News

Whenever a college football program changes coaches, there's always a worry the team will struggle as it adjusts to a new leader.

That shouldn't be a problem at Montana, the most successful football program in the Football Championship Subdivision over the past two decades. The Grizzlies just keep on truckin' no matter who's in charge.

Montana has made the FCS playoffs 17 straight years under four different coaches and played in the championship seven times—including each of the past two seasons.

Soon after last year's 23-21 loss to Villanova in the finals of the FCS playoffs, coach Bobby Hauck (80-17 in seven seasons) left to take the head coaching job at UNLV. Montana then hired Robin Pflugrad, who had been an assistant coach at Oregon, Washington State and Arizona State before serving as the wide receivers coach in Missoula last season.

Hauck didn't leave the cupboard bare for Pflugrad, who has 12 returning starters, including quarterback Andrew Selle (3,043 passing yards, 28 TDs) and running back Chase Reynolds, who ran for 1,502 yards and 22 touchdowns in 2009.

On defense, the Grizzlies boast All-Big Sky cornerback Trumaine Johnson, who led the team with five interceptions, and defensive end Severin Campbell, who had 10.5 tackles for loss a year ago.

If anyone is going to challenge the Grizzlies, it could be in-state rival Montana State, which returns 17 starters from last season, including nine on the defensive side, where the Bobcats led the league by allowing 343.9 yards per game. It will be tough to replace All-America end Dane Fletcher, but the rest of the line returns along with the secondary.

On offense, Cody Kempt is back at quarterback, while C.J. Palmer is the top returning running back. A deep corps of receivers returns as well, including Elvis Akpla and Everette Gilbert.

It worked with Boise State's blue turf, so perhaps installing red turf at Woodward Field will turn Eastern Washington into an FCS power. The Eagles have an outstanding linebacker in J.C. Sherritt, who finished second last year in the voting for the Buck Buchanan Award, given to the FCS' top defensive player.

Junior Taiwan Jones, a third-team "all-purpose" All-American, will concentrate on running back this year for the Eagles. A pair of transfers in Bo Levi Mitchell, a two-year starter at SMU, and Greg Panelli from Modesto (Calif.) Junior College will battle for the quarterback position vacated by all-conference honoree Matt Nichols.

Northern Arizona has perhaps the league's top quarterback in senior Michael Herrick, who was the ninth-place finisher for the Walter Payton Award last year after passing for 3,356 yards and 22 touchdowns.

The Lumberjacks return seven starters on defense, led by first-team all-league safety Matt Estrada (78 tackles) and defensive end Isaac Bond (8.5 sacks). If NAU can learn how to finish the season—the team has lost its final four games each of the past two years—it could grab a playoff berth.

Weber State may take a step back in 2010 after losing a lot of talent from last year's FCS playoff team. The Wildcats lost a pair of All-Americans in center Kyle Mutcher and cornerback Josh Morris, not to mention four-year starting running back Trevyn Smith and receiver Tim Toone, who led the league with 83 receptions.

Coach Ron McBride does return quarterback Cameron Higgins, who will try to bounce back from a subpar year in which he threw 20 interceptions to go with 3,326 passing yards and 30 touchdowns. Inside linebacker Taylor Sedillo, a first-team all-league selection, leads the Wildcat defense.

Sacramento State finished in a tie for fifth last year thanks to the play of safety Zach Schrader, who was named Big Sky Newcomer of the Year after making 102 tackles (fourth best in the league) and four interceptions. Another newcomer, wide receiver Brandyn Reed, earned second-team all-league honors after catching 46 passes. Quarterback Jason Smith returns for his senior year after throwing for 12 touchdowns in '09.

Idaho State had a dismal 2009, which started with losses to Arizona State and Oklahoma by a combined score of 114-3 and eight straight defeats after that. However, the 10th loss was nearly the FCS upset of the year against unbeaten Montana. The Bengals lost 12-10 on a last-second field goal, then turned around and defeated Portland State 41-34 to end the season. A.J. Storms, a first-team All-Big Sky linebacker, is the top returning defender, and Russel Hill is back at quarterback. The Bengals also have several transfers.

After winning just one game in three straight years, Northern Colorado made some progress with three wins last year (only one in Big Sky play), finishing in a tie for last. Most of the Bears' experience comes on the defensive side with the likes of linebacker John Eddy, cornerback Korey Askew and safety Max Hewitt. Leading rusher Andre Harris returns at running back.

The Jerry Glanville experiment didn't work at Portland State, where the former NFL head coach resigned after a 9-24 record in three seasons. The Vikings hired a coach less than half Glanville's age in 33-year-old Nigel Burton, who was previously defensive coordinator at Nevada. Burton, the first black head football coach in Big Sky history, has only one all-conference performer returning in sophomore kicker Zach Brown, who made 18 of 25 field goals last season.

Bell for league's first automatic NCAA bid will toll for Liberty

By Chris Lang
The (Lynchburg, Va.) News & Advance

For the first time since the conference began sponsoring football in 2002, the Big South's champion will be given an automatic berth into the expanded 20-team FCS playoff field this year. In the league's first eight seasons, only Coastal Carolina earned an at-large bid, going 9-2 in 2006 to land a spot in the former 16-team field.

Coastal Carolina never recaptured the magic from that run, and Liberty has taken over as the league's top team. In the last three seasons, Liberty has posted a 14-1 Big South record, with its only loss coming last season when Stony Brook drove 74 yards in the final minute to rally past the Flames.

The Seawolves have emerged as the top challenger to Liberty's Big South supremacy, though both of the Flames' top rivals—Stony Brook and Charleston Southern—must travel to Lynchburg, Va., to unseat the beast.

Last season was supposed to be a retooling year for Liberty (8-3 overall, 5-1 Big South). Instead, the Flames increased their Big South win streak to 16 games before losing to Stony Brook in the season finale. Liberty led the FCS in turnover margin (plus-1.91 per game) and scoring offense (36.4 points per game).

Mike Brown was named Big South Offensive Player of the Year while splitting his time at quarterback and receiver. Brown will be Liberty's full-time QB this year, giving the team an athletic threat at the position. University of Massachusetts transfer Korrey Davis, who played high school ball in Lynchburg, should be the every-down running back Liberty lacked last season.

TOP PLAYERS

Defensively, the Flames, who return five starters, will be faster and more athletic, especially at linebacker and in the secondary. One of Liberty's biggest weapons is kicker Matt Bevins, an All-American who tied for the national lead in field goals (2.0 per game) last season.

Stony Brook coach Chuck Priore rode the legs of the tailback duo of Edwin Gowins and Conte Cuttino (1,690 combined rushing yards and 13 TDs) to a share of the Big South championship in 2009. Though Cuttino is gone, Gowins is back, leaving the Seawolves (6-5, 5-1) as Liberty's top challenger. Stony Brook wasn't one-dimensional last year, as junior college transfer Michael Coulter emerged as a reliable threat at quarterback.

Stony Brook took advantage of the demise of its Long Island football neighbor, Hofstra, which disbanded its program in November. Brock Jackolski joins Gowins in the backfield after racking up nearly 2,000 all-purpose yards in two years with the Pride. Miguel Maysonet, another running back, transferred from Hofstra as well.

Defensively, the Seawolves welcome another transfer, Al-Majid Hutchins, a cornerback who played in six games for Rutgers in 2009.

Charleston Southern (6-5, 4-2) followed a familiar pattern last year, starting slowly against a brutal schedule before rallying for a respectable finish in the Big South race. The Buccaneers beat league co-champion Stony Brook at home in overtime and lost by a touchdown to the other co-champion, Liberty, at home. They must travel to face both this season.

The Bucs return everyone who matters on offense, including quarterback A.J. Toscano, all-purpose threat Gerald Stevenson and tailbacks Antwan Ivey and DeMarcus Moon. Defensively, two key members of the linebacking corps, Fred Godfrey and Chris Patrick, are back, as is defensive end Joel Walton (6 sacks in 2009).

Coastal Carolina (5-6, 3-3) improved after going 1-4 in Big South games two seasons ago. But the Chanticleers are well removed from their glory days, when they won three straight league titles between 2004-06. Coastal struggled on offense last year, failing to reach 20 points five times, and the coaching staff began simplifying the terminology as the season went along.

The process continued in the offseason. The Chanticleers will switch to a zone-blocking scheme in hopes of jump-starting a rushing attack that averaged just 153 yards per contest last year.

Aramis Hillary, a transfer from South Carolina, will give returning quarterbacks Zach MacDowall and Jamie Childers plenty of competition for the starting job. All-America cornerback Josh Norman leads the defense.

Since 2004, Gardner-Webb (6-5, 3-3) has been the picture of mediocrity. The Runnin' Bulldogs have finished either 5-6 or 6-5 in each of the last six seasons and last year continued a trend where they faded in November after strong starts. The Bulldogs will break in a new quarterback after the departure of senior Stan Doolittle, and they must replace one of the top receivers in the conference in Dobson Collins. As usual, the Bulldogs' strength on defense will be a linebacking corps led by Marty Patterson, a hard hitter who racked up 110 tackles last season.

VMI (2-9, 1-5) figured to be one of the most improved teams in the conference last season when it returned 19 starters. Instead, it took a big step back and beat only winless Presbyterian in conference play. The Keydets' spread-option attack will have to plug along without quarterback Tim Maypray and running back Howard Abegesah, who combined for 2,820 all-purpose yards a year ago. The Keydets allowed 403.7 yards per game defensively last year and turned the ball over 35 times.

Presbyterian (0-11, 0-6) allowed 40.1 points per game last season. In the final year of a transition to Division I, the Blue Hose return some playmakers on offense, but QB Brandon Miley, who was outstanding as a freshman, must improve on a rough sophomore campaign in which he threw 16 picks.

Despite downsizing, Colonial favorites still best in FCS

By John O'Connor
Richmond Times-Dispatch

Ascending in the Colonial Athletic Association this year will be a big challenge, especially for Towson, a team that will play five former national champions—all conference foes—this fall.

The Tigers enter their seventh Colonial season still seeking a winning conference record. While Towson seems to be improving, its streak of mediocrity is likely to continue due to the presence of so many national-caliber CAA programs.

In the last seven years, four different CAA teams have won FCS titles—Villanova, Richmond, James Madison and Delaware—with Villanova and Richmond taking the previous two championships. Last season alone, eight of 12 Colonial members were ranked at some point and four of the top seven teams in the final FCS poll were from the conference.

This season features a streamlined Colonial, down to 10 teams and one division after Hofstra and Northeastern dropped football. Support for those programs was relatively thin, and neither had challenged the CAA's best in recent years.

Yet the Colonial plans to return to 12 members, as Old Dominion comes aboard next season with Georgia State following in 2012.

This year, however, Villanova will defend its FCS title with most of last year's group back, led by 2009 CAA Offensive Player of the Year Matt Szczur, a running back/wide receiver hybrid who also returns kickoffs and occasionally throws the ball. Also an accomplished baseball player, there's a chance Szczur could enter the Major League Baseball draft before the season.

Villanova coach Andy Talley, the 2009 CAA Coach of the Year, recognizes the 5-11, 195-pounder as "a spectacular player, the most talented that I've had since (Villanova alumnus) Brian Westbrook."

The CAA's quarterback report features Delaware's Pat Devlin (a transfer from Penn State), Richmond's Aaron Corp (a transfer from USC) and William & Mary's Mike Paulus (a transfer from North Carolina).

Assuming Matt Szczur does not go pro in baseball, Villanova (14-1 overall, 7-1 CAA) leads the conference with one of the most versatile and potent players in the FCS. He scored touchdowns on runs, receptions and kickoff returns last season and also passed for a touchdown.

Szczur's explosive first steps, uncommon leg strength and deceptive speed make him hard to handle, as he demonstrated in the 23-21 win over Montana in the national championship game. On his way to becoming the game's Most Outstanding Player,

GAME TO WATCH

10/30/10 Richmond at Villanova

A meeting of the last two Football Championship Subdivision winners could decide the Colonial title this year. The 2009 champion, Villanova, beat 2008 kingpin Richmond 21-20 last season, which was the Spiders' only regular-season defeat.

Szczur rushed 14 times for 159 yards and caught four passes for 68 yards.

If Szczur running behind 6-4, 325-pound All-America tackle Ben Ijalana doesn't cause defenses to panic, quarterback Chris Whitney doing so might. The 6-2, 230-pound senior rushed for 987 yards last season. Whitney's throwing motion isn't textbook, but he is an accurate passer.

As long as Szczur and Whitney are running behind Ijalana in the Wildcats' spread attack, Villanova will be an offensive force in the CAA. Last year it led the league by a substantial margin—an average of 240.3 rushing yards.

The Wildcats' defense features linebackers Terence Thomas and Marquis Kirkland, as well as a couple of the league's top defensive backs in safety John Dempsey and cornerback Jimmy Pitts.

There is no way to predict what Richmond (11-2, 7-1) will do in new coach Latrell Scott's first year. Scott, a Richmond native who was an assistant for the Spiders, as well as for Tennessee and Virginia, has never even been a coordinator. Now, he is Division I football's youngest head coach at age 34.

The return of several assistants who worked under

Scott's predecessor, new Virginia head coach Mike London, suggests Richmond will stick with what got it to the playoffs the last three seasons: ball control and outstanding defense.

The catch is that most of the experienced Spiders on offense are receivers: Kevin Grayson, Tre Gray and Donte Boston. Richmond needs to replace four starters on the offensive line, a four-year starter at quarterback and its top running back, Justin Forte.

Replacing Eric Ward at quarterback shouldn't be a problem, as USC junior transfer Aaron Corp is already the presumed starter (though sophomore John Laub was in the mix through spring ball). The Spiders are also looking for a new lead running back, and Garrett Wilkins and Kendall Gaskins are prime candidates.

For the past two seasons, senior defensive tackle Martin Parker has been among Richmond's strongest, quickest run stoppers. He collected 15.5 tackles as a junior, as the Spiders allowed an average of 79 rushing yards last year. Ballhawk Eric McBride will again be one of the league's fastest and most active linebackers, as will Patrick Weldon. Cornerback Justin Rogers is the team's best in coverage.

The Spiders nicely negotiated the transition from Dave Clawson to London in 2008, when they won the national championship. If Richmond can rebuild its offensive line, a fourth straight trip to the playoffs seems likely.

James Madison (6-5, 4-4) quarterback Justin Thorpe ended 2009 as the CAA's Offensive Rookie of the Year. But he experienced many growing pains along the way. His development would serve the Dukes well this season. Thorpe is a run/pass threat who coach Mickey Matthews compares to former JMU star Rodney Landers, one of the best quarterbacks in the FCS two years ago. Thorpe received on-the-job training because of a broken foot suffered by Drew Dudzik in the fifth game last year. Dudzik, who was splitting time with Thorpe in 2009, also returns.

James Madison has been plagued by injuries at the running back position the last couple of years. Since Matthews frames his offense around a mobile quarterback and a strong running game, he'll need to find a healthy replacement fast. Still, offensive tackle Theo Sherman is the man who'll keep the Dukes' running game on track.

On defense, the Dukes lose end Arthur Moats, who won the 2009 Buck Buchanan Award as the best defensive player in the FCS. But James Madison still boasts some of the league's fastest athletes—linebacker Pat Williams and lineman Ronnell Brown, who will lead the defense.

The Dukes' dip to 4-4 in the league last season after leading the CAA in previous years could be temporary if JMU can find a running back that can remain fit and productive.

Somehow New Hampshire (10-3, 6-2) keeps finding itself leading the league in turnover margin. That, as much as anything, has kept the Wildcats in the FCS playoffs for six straight years. In 2009, the Wildcats posted a plus-13 turnover margin, which was the result of 21 interceptions in 13 games.

Dino Vasso will be the cornerback to avoid in New Hampshire's defense. Vasso has had five interceptions in each of the last two years, and in 2009 he returned two of them for touchdowns.

But balanced offense has been the team's trademark since Sean McDonnell took over as coach in 1999, and the Wildcats may lead the league in scoring again after averaging 31.8 points a year ago. Senior quarterback R.J. Toman passed for 2,181 yards as a junior, down from 3,110 his sophomore year. But the 6-1, 195-pounder, who also had 251 rushing yards last season, gives New Hampshire another quality ballcarrier in its spread system.

McDonnell's offense is regarded as one of the most difficult in the Colonial to prepare for, and here's why: Last season, 13 Wildcats ran the ball and 15 of them made receptions—and UNH features more formations than most teams.

The Wildcats will try to do it again this year without All-America tight end Scott Sicko and versatile running back Chad Kackert. Though UNH has senior Sean Jellison (424 rushing yards) to step in for Kackert, the Wildcats could use some additional protection along the offensive line, as they take to the air often.

A breakout year on defense sent William & Mary (11-3, 6-2) to the FCS semifinals in '09. The Tribe led the league in scoring defense (12.1 points per game) and rushing defense (61.1 yards per game), both school records. The Tribe's 49 sacks and 112 tackles for loss also went into the school's record books.

Matching last season's level of achievement will be tough without defensive end Adrian Tracy and tackle Sean Lissemore, but W&M returns a couple of quality linebackers in Jake Trantin and Evan Franks, and has one of the CAA's most dynamic players in cornerback B.W. Webb. The CAA Defensive Rookie of the Year led the Colonial with eight interceptions (2 for TDs) and is a dangerous punt returner.

On offense, running back Jonathan Grimes rejoins the team after averaging a league-leading 92.4 rushing yards per game last year. The 5-10, 201-pounder also accounted for 289 receiving yards and returns kickoffs. North Carolina transfer Mike Paulus, a former Parade All-American with two seasons of eligibility remaining, is expected to start at quarterback.

Delaware (6-5, 4-4) may be the CAA surprise in 2010, because 26 returning players have starting experience.

The Blue Hens seek offensive support for Pat Devlin, the transfer from Penn State who led the league with 2,664 passing yards last season. They'll start their search with the offensive line, which brings back four starters but has been shaky the past two years. Next, the team will try to boost the performances of rushers David Hayes and Leon Jackson.

The Hens made strides last year after losing eight games in 2008, the most in program history. But to maintain the momentum, defensive improvement is a must, as Delaware gave up an average of 335.3 yards per game last year. Ninth-year coach K.C. Keeler will rely on tackle Siddiq Haynes, three veteran linebackers and a pair of standout defensive backs (Anthony Walters and Anthony Bratton) to make that happen.

Maintaining possession and toughening up on the road are high priorities at Massachusetts (5-6, 3-5). The Minutemen threw 22 interceptions in 2009, and UMass went winless in five games away from home. Kyle Havens is back at quarterback for his second season after transferring from the California junior college ranks, but he was responsible for 15 of the interceptions and also had fumble problems. Some new blood on offense should help, as UMass picked up Northeastern transfer John Griffin (eligible immediately), who gained 1,009 rushing yards in the Huskies' final season of football. The Minutemen also benefited when Hofstra dropped football. Wide receiver Anthony Nelson, a transfer from the now-defunct program, is expected to have an instant impact.

Generating a pass rush from a defense that collected a CAA-low 13 sacks is also on the to-do list of second-year coach Kevin Morris.

The first thing Maine (5-6, 4-4) needs to do is establish offensive identity. The Black Bears went into last season planning to showcase sophomore fullback Jared Turcotte, an all-conference runner as a redshirt freshman (625 yards).

That plan fizzled, as the 6-2, 221-pound Turcotte missed the entire year with a lower abdominal injury that required surgery. Maine coach Jack Cosgrove was left with a young offensive line and a couple of fine receivers and able passers. So the Black Bears went to the air.

Warren Smith got his first start at quarterback in late September and threw for 1,695 yards before suffering a broken foot that kept him out the rest of the way. In came Chris Treister, who had one of the finest passing days in program history, with 40 completions for 468 yards and five touchdowns in a win over Rhode Island. Cosgrove will likely pick Smith or Treister as his quarterback and get Turcotte back to rejoin an offensive line that has three starters returning.

Injuries forced Towson (2-9, 1-7) to use nine different combinations on the offensive line (11 different players) last year, which caused a lot of position switching throughout the season. Coach Rob Ambrose says the Tigers need a major effort in strength and conditioning during the offseason to avoid comparable problems this year. The team also needs to settle on a quarterback, and sophomore Peter Athens looks to be the favorite after missing the second half of last season with a knee injury.

Rhode Island (1-10, 0-8) surrendered 28 or more points in each game last season, which reflects the primary upgrade coach Joe Trainer is looking for in his second season. The Rams will get some help from three Hofstra transfers: quarterback Steve Probst (7 games last year for the Pride), wide receiver Billy Morgan (13 catches in '09) and hard-hitting safety Chris Edmond.

Look for Mustangs to get their kicks again

By Steve Silverman

On paper, UC Davis would appear a likely candidate to defend its Great West Conference championship this year after going 3-1 in the league and 6-5 overall in 2009. But coming off a strong finish and welcoming back 19 starters, Cal Poly should have a great chance to reverse its 4-7 mark of a year ago and finish on top in 2010. Last season saw the team in transition, as former coach Rich Ellerson left to become head coach at Army and successor Tim Walsh tried to put his own stamp on the team. Walsh switched to a conventional 4-3 defense that the Mustangs were slow to pick up.

Cal Poly (4-7 overall, 1-3 Great West) should be a more settled team as Tim Walsh begins his second season as coach of the Mustangs. Tony Smith has the best chance of starting at quarterback after completing 112 passes for 1,618 yards and 15 touchdowns last year. The senior is a talented passer and athlete, but Walsh would like to see him become more aggressive and consistent in his leadership role. Smith's top weapon should be senior wide receiver Dominique Johnson, who caught 43 passes for 741 yards and six touchdowns a year ago. Johnson had offseason shoulder surgery but should be healthy by the first game.

TOP PLAYERS

- offense → Tysson Poots, WR, Southern Utah

The Mustang defense should be more consistent this season now that it has played in a 4-3 system for a full year. Sophomore linebacker Kenny Jackson may be the most active player on the unit. He had 58 tackles last season, including 4.5 for loss, with two fumble recoveries and an interception.

UC Davis (6-5, 3-1) will not give up its Great West title easily. The Aggies took a while to find their identity last year, but became a formidable offensive team once they did.

The Aggies struggled out of the gate, dropping three of their first four games. But they bounced back to win five of the final six behind the stellar passing of quarterback Greg Denham, who had a completion rate of 61.8 percent and threw for 19 touchdowns.

Denham returns to riddle opposing defenses with his strong arm, quick release and accuracy. But he loses his favorite target in wideout Chris Carter, who caught 85 passes in '09. With Carter gone, senior Sean Creadick will have the opportunity to become the team's go-to receiver. He caught 39 passes for 466 yards and five touchdowns a year ago.

On defense, free safety Danny Hart is back for his senior year and is coming off a solid season in which he had 53 tackles, four passes defended and three recovered fumbles.

GAME TO WATCH

11/13/10 UC Davis at Cal Poly

After struggling throughout the 2009 season, the Mustangs should be in contention this year. If Cal Poly plans on being conference champs, it must win this game at home against UC Davis.

North Dakota (6-5, 2-2) was an up-and-down team last year that had a difficult time finding consistency. The score 91 points in back-to-back wins over North Dakota and UC Davis. Thunderbirds coach Ed Lamb received an outstanding contribution from wide receiver Tysson Poots, who dominated the Great West despite missing the first three games of the season with a foot injury. Poots returns for his senior year after catching 85 passes for 1,081 yards and 15 touchdowns. Poots' numbers may not be as good this season without graduated quarterback Cade Cooper, who threw for 2,988 yards with 31 touchdowns and 12 interceptions. Junior Zack Olsen has the best chance of taking over under center.

Senior cornerback Colin highlight of the season was a 31-17 win over Cal Poly, which showed the program's potential. If the Fighting Sioux are going to build on last year's success, look for senior quarterback Jake Landry to have a big season. Landry was solid a year ago, completing 178 passes for 1,968 yards with 12 touchdowns and nine interceptions. He also ran for 217 yards and two touchdowns, and his athletic ability can frustrate defenses at times.

The defense is led by junior cornerback Dominique Hawkins, who had 61 tackles, 3.5 tackles for loss, four passes defended and two interceptions in 2009.

Southern Utah (5-6, 2-2) used an explosive offense to Pretlow returns on defense after making 82 tackles and four interceptions last season.

South Dakota (5-5, 2-2) returns 15 starters but needs to find a replacement for quarterback Noah Shepard. Yet coach Ed Meierkort will have running back Chris Ganius to carry the ball again. Ganius' 828 yards on 148 carries earned him a spot on the All-Great West first team. He had a memorable 193-yard rushing effort in the Coyotes' 45-21 win over Southern Utah.

Sophomore wide receiver Tom Flanagan led the team in receptions with 45 catches for 530 yards and four touchdowns. He is valuable on third downs and makes the tough catches look easy.

GEORGIA STATE

—Rebecca Rudolph

In their inaugural year of college football, the Panthers will run the gamut of opponents, beginning the season at home against tiny Shorter College of the NAIA and ending their campaign with mammoth Alabama, the 2009 FBS national champions. The team will also play Old Dominion, which GSU will join as a member of the Colonial Athletic Association in 2012. Bill Curry, the former head coach at Georgia Tech (1980-86), Alabama (1987-89) and Kentucky (1990-96) before becoming an ESPN analyst (1997-2007), will lead the fledgling program as its first coach.

Curry says 5-11, 175-pound running back Travis Evans is perhaps his best offensive threat. The redshirt freshman rushed for 1,662 yards and 17 touchdowns on 166 carries as a senior at Williston High in Florida. Anchoring the offensive line are freshman guard Michael Davis (6-3, 315 pounds) and junior center Ben Jacoby (6-2, 275), a transfer from Ball State. Sophomore linebacker Brad Chahoy (5-11, 202), a Georgia Southern transfer, is the player to watch on defense.

LAMAR

—Rebecca Rudolph

Though the Cardinals won't join the Southland Conference until 2011, they have packed their debut-season schedule with soon-to-be conference foes. Four of the Southland's top five teams in 2009—Stephen F. Austin, McNeese State, Southeastern Louisiana and Sam Houston State—will welcome Lamar to the FCS in 2010. McNeese State will give the Cards their first taste in the season opener Sept. 4.

To help ease the transition, coach Ray Woodard turned his recruiting sights to the Texas junior college ranks, where he found some much-needed experience in the secondary with the addition of Navarro College's Stephone Mercer and Ryan Clark. They'll get help in the defensive backfield from another transfer, 5-11, 194-pound Jordan Garrett, a former starter at Tulane.

Offensively, Lamar should get a boost from Cameron Eppler, a 6-3, 293-pound guard who started 11 games and didn't allow a sack for 2009 national junior college champion Blinn (Texas) College. The Cardinals will look to three more juco products from nearby Navarro—quarterback Andre Bevil and wideouts J.J. Hayes and Josh Powderill—to move the ball through the air. Kwabena Asante, a 6-1, 210-pound transfer from Hofstra, could make a significant impact on the running game.

OLD DOMINION

—Will Long

As they enter their second year of football and final season before joining the Colonial Athletic Association, the Monarchs will field an experienced team. Coach Bobby Wilder returns every starter from last year's 9-2 squad, which claimed the most wins ever for a first-year NCAA team.

Old Dominion boasted the 10th-best rushing offense (216.7 yards per game) in the FCS last season and will again be led by dual-threat quarterback Thomas DeMarco (1,921 passing yards, 892 rushing yards, 38 total TDs). Diminutive running back Mario Crawford (6.1 yards per carry) paces the ground game, while wideout Reid Evans will be the top receiving target after making 46 catches last year.

The defense adds three transfers on the line in Ronnie Cameron (Hofstra), Deron Mayo (Hofstra) and Dominik Davenport (West Virginia). Junior linebacker Mychael McJunkins will lead the defense after making a team-high 85 tackles last year.

SAVANNAH STATE

—Will Long

To say the offseason at Savannah State was a tumultuous one would be a vast understatement. After finishing 2-8 in 2009, second-year coach Robby Wells was forced to resign one week before national signing day. Wells became the seventh head coach in 11 years to lose his job at Savannah State. Several weeks later, Wells filed a discrimination lawsuit against the university. In addition to these distractions, 33 players

Even with SSU football seemingly on life support, the program did receive some good news. The Tigers will join the MEAC as a full-fledged member in 2011. As for this season, interim head coach Julius Dixon will rely on the playmaking of running back Justin Babb (804 rushing yards, 6 TDs in 2009). The defense must replace leading tackler Antwan Allen and his 79 stops. The Tigers will take on four MEAC teams this season before joining the league next year.

Road to top getting tougher for Harvard and Pennsylvania

By Andy Jasner
Correspondent

In 2009, the Ivy League championship basically came down to two teams: Penn and Harvard.

Things should get a lot tougher this season.

The Quakers captured their Ivy League-record 11th outright title last season, holding off the Crimson by one game. That was after losing to Lafayette and Villanova in tough nonconference matchups.

While Penn appears to once again be the class of the "Ancient Eight," it can expect to receive major challenges from Harvard, Brown, Columbia, Princeton and Yale.

For the first time in six years, Penn enters spring as the defending Ivy champion.

Last year's championship marked the seventh title for Quakers coach Al Bagnoli, who was a finalist for the Eddie Robinson Award, given to the nation's top FCS coach. The Quakers finished 7-0 in the league, 8-2 overall and nearly upset national champion Villanova, falling 14-3 at Franklin Field.

Sophomore quarterback Billy Ragone suffered a season-ending injury in the league opener at Dartmouth last season. Ragone is back this year to compete with senior Keiffer Garton and junior John Hurley for the starting job.

With Ragone back, it marks the first time in three years the Quakers will have a healthy group of quarterbacks going into spring practice. In each of the last two years, at least two or more of the team's quarterbacks were recovering from significant injuries.

Since last year's championship, Penn has stayed healthy, with no major injuries to report.

Other key players returning include tight end Ryan Murray, wide receiver Ryan Calvert, offensive lineman Drew Luongo and defensive lineman Jake Peterson.

Penn finished the 2009 campaign ranked No. 14 overall thanks in large part to a stingy defense that recorded two shutouts.

Harvard had a solid season and may have exceeded expectations with a 6-1 record in the Ivy League and 7-3 overall mark.

With a 14-10 win at Yale, the Crimson extended their league record of seven-win seasons to nine consecutive years. Over the past nine seasons, the Crimson have compiled a 71-18 mark.

Harvard must replace last year's senior captain, Carl Ehrlich, who finished his career with 100 tackles. But safety Collin Zych will return to anchor the defense. Zych led the Ivy in pass breakups (12), passes defended (14) and ranked third in solo tackles with 53.

Harvard was much improved last season and could provide a roadblock for the Quakers in their quest for back-to-back Ivy League championships.

On offense, Collier Winters is back at quarterback.

Winters improved as last season progressed and then threw two late touchdowns in the victory over Yale. He was 19-for-26 with 211 yards while also rushing for 51 yards against the Bulldogs.

Brown is also coming off a surprising season, posting a 4-3 mark in the Ivy and 6-4 overall record.

In his first year as quarterback for the Bears, Kyle Newhall-Caballero put together record-setting numbers. He completed 259 passes for 2,709 yards and 18 touchdowns to lead the Ivy. Newhall-Caballero ranked second in the FCS in completions per game (25.9), 10th in total offense (281.4 yards per game) and 12th in passing yards (270.9). His 259 completions ranked seventh in league history for a single season.

Columbia proved it could score last season, as evidenced by a 225-point outburst in 10 games. The Lions actually scored more points than they allowed (220) en route to a 3-4 mark in the league and 4-6 overall.

Columbia has a strong offensive line returning, paced by junior left tackle Jeff Adams. In his first season as a starter, Adams had a terrific year protecting the quarterback, helping the Lions' offense finish second in the league in rushing offense at 158.6 yards per game as well as third in total offense (329.7).

Senior tight end Andrew Kennedy is back after making five touchdown catches a year ago. He ranked third on the team in receptions and receiving yards.

Princeton (4-6 overall, 3-4 Ivy) had trouble stopping the opposition while giving up 265 points in 2009.

Welcome new coach Bob Surace, who was a key member of the 1989 Ivy League champion Tigers. Surace comes over from the Cincinnati Bengals, where he was an assistant for nine seasons.

Senior linebacker Steven Cody led the Ivy in tackles (104) and tackles per game (11.6) last year. Cody recorded 10 tackles for loss, 3.5 sacks and two interceptions, including one he returned for a 77-yard score in Princeton's 17-14 victory at Lehigh.

For the first time since 1998, Yale will have six home games scheduled. Junior defensive tackle Joe Young and linebacker Sean Williams are back after being named honorable mention All-Ivy last season. Young had 24 tackles and two sacks while Williams chipped in 20 tackles and three sacks.

Dartmouth won a pair of Ivy League games in 2009 but finished 2-8 overall.

Still, there is some solid talent returning, including sophomore linebacker Garrett Wymore. He appeared in all 10 games last year, starting the last eight, and was just one tackle shy of leading the team with 63 (37 were solo). He also broke up two passes and recovered a fumble.

Kent Austin is the new coach at Cornell (2-8), which went 1-6 in the Ivy last season. Among the returning players expected to play big roles this year are safety Anthony Ambrosi (62 tackles) and cornerback Rashad Campbell.

Plenty of room for rising stars in 2010 Valley

By Randy Reinhardt
Bloomington (Ill.) Pantagraph

As the majority of the Missouri Valley Football Conference spent the 2009 season knocking each other around in the standings, two teams rose above the fray.

Southern Illinois and South Dakota State swept the other seven conference teams and advanced to the FCS playoffs, with the Salukis claiming the Valley crown after a 34-15 victory over the Jackrabbits in Brookings.

The same two teams figure to lead the pack once again, though Illinois State is gaining ground. The Redbirds made great strides in coach Brock Spack's first season and could challenge for the 2010 title. And counting out perennial contender Northern Iowa would be unwise.

Individually, there is room at the top for offensive stars to emerge, as the Valley lost three first-team All-Americans to graduation: Missouri State tight end Clay Harbor and running backs Deji Karim of Southern Illinois and Pat Paschall of North Dakota State.

Southern Illinois (11-2 overall, 8-0 Missouri Valley) moves into a new stadium this fall and will look to two quarterbacks for leadership in Chris Dieker and Paul McIntosh. Whoever steps in will work behind offensive line stalwarts David Pickard and Bryan Boemer. The Salukis' biggest challenge will be replacing running back Deji Karim. They may turn to a committee of Lucien Walker, Steve Strother and Pittsburgh transfer Shariff Harris.

The Salukis' defense brings back All-Valley players in Korey Lindsey and Mike McElroy.

South Dakota State (8-4, 7-1) features a 1,304-yard rusher in Kyle Minett, who ran for 16 TDs in '09.

Returning quarterback Thomas O'Brien will have to fight off junior college transfer Jordan Thomas, but the winner of the job will have center Ryan McKnight and tackle Jonathan Fick blocking for him.

Even though the defense lost All-American Danny Batten, the line should remain stable with Antonio Thompson and Zach Bowers. Linebacker Derek Domino also returns.

Illinois State (6-5, 5-3) lost its starting quarterback, Drew Kiel, in last season's opener, only to see Matt Brown take over and be named the MVC's Freshman of the Year. Brown and Kiel will compete for the job this year, and whoever wins will enjoy the protection of five returning starters on the line.

An anemic running game was addressed in the off-season with the addition of transfer tailbacks Erik Smith (Wisconsin) and Ashton Leggett (Michigan State).

Purdue transfer Nick Caro Golding should spice up the Redbird pass rush on an improving defense.

Northern Iowa (7-4, 5-3) has a king-sized chip on its shoulder after Illinois State beat the Panthers in the final game of the regular season, costing them a playoff bid.

The team paced the Valley in total offense and total defense in '09, but faces losses on both lines. Also gone is all-conference quarterback Pat Grace. Junior Zach Davis is first in line to take over under center.

Sophomore tailback Carlos Anderson showed potential while rushing for 541 yards in his debut season.

South Dakota State will send the Valley's top returning rusher, Kyle Minett, into battle against the rugged Saluki defense in a contest that could decide the conference championship.

Missouri State (6-5, 4-4) could not be taken seriously as a Valley title contender until a leaky defense located a few patches. The Bears did that in 2009, dropping their scoring defense from 35.3 points allowed per game in 2008 to 22.4.

Linebacker Antoine Wilkinson, tackle Waylon Richardet and safety Skylar Smith will try to keep the improvement going.

All-league offensive lineman David Arkin will be clearing a path for Mikael Cooper-Falls (424 rushing yards) and Stephen Johnston, who missed all of last season with a knee injury.

New coach Eric Wolford brings a new approach to Youngstown State (6-5, 4-4), with a faster-paced defense. But a seasoned linebacker group of Taylor Hill, Deonta Tate, John Sasson and David Rach will need to take heat off a young secondary.

Quarterback is wide open, with Marc Kanetsky and Kurt Hess among the possibilities. Wideout Dominique Barnes will be a target for whoever emerges, while backs Jamaine Cook and Torrian Pace should both see time.

North Dakota State (3-8, 2-6) endured its first losing season in coach Craig Bohl's seventh year and must replace running back Pat Paschall. D.J. McNorton is first in line for those duties.

Quarterback Jose Mohler started four games last season and will be challenged for the job by Brock Jensen and Dante Perez.

On defense, Matt Anderson is back from a neck injury to join developing youngsters

Preston Evans and Brandon Jemison at linebacker.

Western Illinois (1-10, 0-8) suffered through a nightmarish 2009, freefalling from 6-5 the previous season to a lone triumph.

Hope for a revival starts with the return to health of quarterback Matt Barr. Michigan State transfer Caulton Ray should boost the running game, while wide receiver Lito Senatus will aid the passing game.

Linebacker Kyle Glazier has topped the team in tackles the past two seasons and will get help from linebacker Brandon Kreczmer.

Indiana State (1-10, 1-7) let loose a sigh of relief after snapping the nation's longest losing streak at 33 games by topping Western Illinois last year, but much work remains for coach Trent Miles.

The Sycamores showed progress defensively yet still surrendered 35.5 points per game. Linebacker Aaron Archie, who had 117 tackles as a freshman, leads the defense.

Wagner QB Doscher could be difference in very tight race

By Steve Amedio
Schenectady (N.Y.) Gazette

Nick Doscher is proof that author Thomas Wolfe was wrong.

You can go home again.

Doscher, a two-sport star in high school in 2005, initially gave up football to pursue a professional baseball career. After four seasons in the Kansas City Royals organization, he opted to come home to Staten Island and return to the gridiron.

So, at age 22, Doscher enrolled at Wagner and became the NEC's top quarterback, earning him Rookie-of-the-Year honors.

Now he is poised to take the team to the top of the conference standings.

Despite a winning record in 26 of 29 years with the Seahawks, coach Walt Hameline has never won an NEC crown.

This could be the year, as Doscher, the team's leading rusher and passer in '09, will play a big role in the team's quest to secure its first-ever NEC title.

"He gave us a reason to change what we do in terms of our offensive style," Hameline says. "With him, we were able to switch to a spread-type offense."

Nick Doscher's emergence, plus the return of many key starters from last year make Wagner (6-5 overall, 5-3 NEC) the favorite to capture this year's title.

TOP PLAYERS

Fullback Rich Parker, halfback Dominique Williams and receivers Tyrone Collins, David Crawford and Morgan Mizell return for another season.

The Seahawks have five starters back on a defense that gave up 342 points a year ago. But help is on the way in new defensive coordinator Malik Hall, who coached at Fordham last season.

Albany (7-4, 6-2) was solid last season but fell from its perch atop the league standings. Now it loses standout running back David McCarty, who the team hopes to replace with freshmen Dillon Romain or Tramaine Wilson. Luckily, sophomore quarterback Andrew Smith took a few snaps last year and moves into a starting role.

Senior Trevor Anderson, a second-team All-NEC pick in 2009, will anchor a defense that graduated all four of its starting linebackers.

Robert Morris (5-6, 5-3) will be potent offensively, returning 10 starters, including senior halfback Myles Russ, the NEC's only returning 1,000-yard rusher (1,059). He'll be joined by quarterback Jeff Sinclair, second-team all-conference tight end Shadrae King and kicker Garrett Clawson.

However, the defense returns only four starters in linebacker Alex DiMichele, nose guard Chris Roberts, cornerback Rolf Bathold and linebacker Elias Navarro.

Central Connecticut State (9-3, 7-1) was a surprise league champion last year, losing its only game to Wagner. But the Blue Devils suffered significant graduation losses and must depend on some talented newcomers in junior college QB Gunnar Jespersen and fullback Everette Benjamin, a transfer from Hofstra.

Defensively, the Blue Devils have seven starters back, led by first-team All-NEC safety Alondre Rush.

Once the dominant team in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference, Duquesne (3-8, 2-6) struggled last season in its second year in the NEC. But the Dukes appear on the verge of moving into the league's upper echelon with a defense that returns all 11 starters and an offense that gets some key players back in senior Dave Williams and junior Akeem Moore. Both wideouts battled injuries and sat out last season.

Nathan Totino, a senior linebacker who had 23 tackles in one game last year, leads the defense.

Bryant (5-6, 4-4) was close to a winning season in 2009, suffering three of its four league losses by fewer than five points. If the Bulldogs are to improve their '09 record, they'll have to be more prolific through the air.

Senior QB Mike Croce threw for 1,695 yards a year ago and could air it out again this season with the return of tight end Matt Tracey.

Defensively, Bryant needs to fill holes left by the loss of six starters, but linebacker Jason Riffe and nose tackle Andrew Regan are two potential All-NEC players.

Monmouth (5-6, 4-4) nipped at the heels of success last season using the prowess of David Sinisi, who has since graduated. Now the Hawks might struggle without the NEC's all-time leading rusher and scorer.

Senior Bobby Giles will be counted on to solidify the backfield, but junior Kyle Frazier (1,453 yards, 4 INTs) will have to continue to operate a low-mistake offense.

The Hawks' top players return on defense in junior linebacker Jose Gumbs, the 2009 NEC Defensive Player of the Year, and senior safety Kendall Haley, a first-team all-conference pick.

Sacred Heart (2-8, 2-6) has weapons returning on both sides of the ball, with 10 starters back on defense.

But the Pioneers have pinned their hopes on the passing game with quarterback Dale Fink, who led the NEC with 2,064 aerial yards last season. Unfortunately, Dale also topped the NEC in interceptions (13).

Fink has two good receivers returning in sophomore Jo Jo Jamiel and senior Rich Rossi.

The team's top defender is junior linebacker Chris Mandas, whose 88 tackles paced the Pioneers in 2009.

St. Francis (2-9, 1-7) will likely inch closer to respectability this season with the return of sophomore QB John Kelly. Running backs Jude Yearwood and Kyle Hrabridge balance out the attack.

Defensively, St. Francis lost five starters but has a linebacker unit that ranks with any in the NEC and includes seniors Scott Lewis (118 tackles) and Matthew Parker (103).

EKU defense could put Colonels back in command

By Michael Grant
Louisville Courier-Journal

Eastern Illinois, Eastern Kentucky and Jacksonville State have owned the Ohio Valley Conference since 2001. They're the only teams to win the OVC title outright in a decade, as Tennessee-Martin shared the title with Eastern Illinois in 2006 and Murray was co-champion with Eastern Illinois in 2002. Other than that trio, the last team to win the conference outright—Western Kentucky in 2000—has since moved up from the OVC to the Sun Belt Conference in the Football Bowl Subdivision.

If in doubt, count on one of these three to step up again this season. Eastern Illinois seems well equipped to contend, assuming it finds a capable quarterback. Eastern Kentucky, the OVC's flagship program, is always in the hunt with its 20 conference titles. And Jacksonville State had the league's best record last year but was ineligible for the conference crown.

The league is still looking for a breakthrough in the FCS playoffs after dropping 12 postseason games in a row. An OVC team hasn't made it past the first round since Western Kentucky beat Florida A&M in 2000.

For Eastern Kentucky (5-6 overall, 5-3 OVC), the streak is over. Eastern posted 31 consecutive winning seasons until last year.

The Colonels found a quarterback in OVC Freshman of the Year T.J. Pryor, who was third in the league in passing yards in 2009 with 195.7 per game, but he threw eight interceptions and only six touchdowns.

The team's strength should be its eight returning starters on defense, which include

All-OVC players in senior lineman Andrew Soucy and junior defensive back Jeremy Caldwell. Caldwell led the league in interceptions (7) and forced two fumbles last year. Soucy had 9.5 tackles for loss and blocked a league-best five kicks.

Eastern Illinois (8-4, 6-2) earned its fifth OVC championship last year and has lost only three offensive starters, but one was quarterback Jake Christensen (2,204 yards, 19 TDs). True freshman Jimmy Garoppolo was the only legitimate candidate to replace him at press time. With a young QB and running backs Mon Williams (870 rushing yards) and Chevon Walker (326), this might be more of a run-oriented team in 2010.

On defense, Eastern Illinois returns All-OVC cornerbacks CJ James (5 INT, 44 tackles) and Rashad Haynes and lineman Perry Burge.

Jacksonville State (8-3, 6-1) was the league's best team last season, but it played under a postseason ban because of its failure to meet NCAA academic progress standards. The program is eligible now but will have to win without quarterback Ryan Perrilloux, the league's Offensive Player of the Year in 2009.

The Gamecocks led the league in rushing last season with 188.8 yards per game and return tailback Calvin Middleton (629 yards) for even more production. Jacksonville State also boasts perhaps the conference's top defensive player in All-America cornerback T.J. Heath (6 INTs, 2 for TDs).

Tennessee-Martin's (5-6, 4-4) high-flying offense won't be the same with only five returning starters. So the Skyhawks will likely turn to what is expected to be a strong running game led by Minnesota transfer Kevin Whaley. They also have sophomore running back Jason McNair, nephew of the late Steve McNair, to mix up the backfield.

The defense should be solid with seven returnees, including linebacker Josh Bey (16.5 tackles for loss, 6.5 sacks).

Tennessee Tech (6-5, 5-3) was picked to finish sixth in the preseason polls, but the Golden Eagles ended up tied for second along with Eastern Kentucky in 2009. With an experienced team returning, Tech might surprise again for its first conference championship. The Golden Eagles have a premier wide receiver in Tim Benford (33 receptions, 580 yards), but he will need someone to get him the ball, as starting quarterback Lee Sweeney has graduated.

Tennessee State (4-7, 3-4) has a new coach in Rod Reed, who takes over for James Webster. The team's former defensive coordinator is known for his recruiting (he brought in NFL first-round draft pick Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie) and enjoys a run-heavy offense, which is nothing new for the Tigers, who were fifth in the league in rushing (149.7 yards per game) last season. They return their top four rushers, led by junior quarterback Calvin McNair.

The Chris Hatcher era begins at Murray State (3-8, 2-6) after coach Matt Griffin was fired last year. One thing is for certain: The Racers will throw the football early and often. Hatcher, who arrives Quarterback Jeff Ehrhardt should fit well in Hatcher's system, though he saw action in only four games last year due to an injury to his throwing shoulder. Tailback Josh Brown, a transfer from Iowa, will be in the backfield to help.

Austin Peay State (4-7, 3-5) will be young after losing 26 seniors from last year, and will need an explosive backfield to carry the load. The Gobs return the conference's top rusher in junior Ryan White, who ran for 1,081 yards last year. Senior Terrence Holt (793 yards, a league-best 13 TDs) was fourth in the OVC in rushing.

Southeast Missouri State (2-9, 1-7) coach Tony Samuel will try to get his team on track in his fifth year. The Redhawks are 6-25 in OVC play during his stint. They have eight starters back from a defense that was last in the league in total yards surrendered per game (387.6).

Patriot finally getting some national attention

By Andy Jasner
Correspondent

Teams from the Patriot League won't sneak up on anyone this season.

In 2009, three Patriot members—Holy Cross, Colgate and Lafayette—appeared in the final rankings of both major Football Championship Subdivision Top 25 polls for the first time in four years.

All of those teams are expected to be solid contenders this season, but the Crusaders and Raiders showed the kind of remarkable depth last year that should give them a leg up on the 2010 campaign.

Holy Cross finished at No. 14 in The Sports Network and FCS Coaches' polls, the highest ranking for a Patriot team since Lehigh held the same position after the '04 season.

The Crusaders finished 9-2 overall, won the league with a 5-1 record and advanced for only the second time to the postseason, where they lost to eventual national champion Villanova, 38-28, in the first round. Despite the loss, Holy Cross proved it could compete at the highest level in front of a raucous crowd on the road.

There are many reasons to be optimistic once again this season.

Holy Cross returns 12 starters, including key seniors in wide receiver

Luke Chmielinski, strong safety Anthony DiMichele, linebacker Sean Lamkin, offensive tackle Mike McCabe and defensive end Mude Ohimor. Chmielinski was especially solid with 63 receptions for 807 yards and four touchdowns last year.

The biggest question mark will be at quarterback, where four-year starter Dominic Randolph guided the Crusaders to a league-best 32.2 points per game in '09. The race to succeed him will be made up of junior Kevin Watson, senior Ryan Taggart and touted Essex, Vt., freshman Max Librizzi, who threw for 3,335 yards and 45 scores last year.

It might be unrealistic to expect the Crusaders to rack up the 433.6 yards per game they did last season, but this should be a well-rounded unit once again. A sixth consecutive winning season is a lock.

Colgate entered the national rankings on Sept. 28 and remained there for the rest of the season, finishing at No. 20 in the FCS Coaches' poll and No. 21 in The Sports Network rankings.

The Raiders tied for second in the league with Lafayette and Lehigh at 4-2, yet finished 9-2 overall. That performance prompted the school to reward 62-year-old coach Dick Biddle with a three-year contract extension through 2013. The four-time Patriot League Coach of the Year has led Colgate to a 113-51 record in 14 seasons and winning records in 13 of those. The Raiders have accumulated six league titles and six FCS playoff appearances during his tenure.

The top two teams in the Patriot League will battle in a game that could determine first place once again.

Senior Greg Sullivan is expected to again carry the load on offense. Last season, the 6-1, 204-pound quarterback rushed for 788 yards and seven touchdowns while also throwing for 1,952 yards and 18 scores. His total yardage of 2,740 was the sixth most ever in a season at Colgate.

Junior Nate Eachus returns at running back, and that's good news. He rushed for 919 yards and 16 touchdowns in only eight games a year ago.

Lafayette might have been the surprise of the Patriot League when it joined the polls on Nov. 2.

The Leopards' final record of 8-3 and 4-2 in the league sounds good, but it could have been better if not for a heartbreaking 27-21 overtime loss to rival Lehigh in the 145th meeting of college football's most played rivalry.

Lafayette will rely on senior wide receiver Mark Layton on offense. Layton caught 65 passes for 838 yards and 11 touchdowns last season. His 65 receptions were the second most in school history.

Coach Frank Tavani signed 32 recruits, which is the third-largest haul of prospects in his tenure.

Lehigh won four games last year, all in the Patriot

League. The Mountain Hawks went winless in non-conference play and wound up with a 4-7 overall mark. But there are 17 starters returning from last season, including six all-conference selections.

Nine starters are back on offense, anchored by quarterback JB Clark and running back Jay Campbell.

Lehigh led the FCS in sacks last season and also finished first in the Patriot in pass defense and red-zone defense. Replacing All-America linebacker Matt Cohen will be a challenge.

Fordham was 5-6 overall and 2-4 in the league last season. The Rams won't have multitasking quarterback John Skelton, who set just about every school passing record over the past four years.

There are a number of candidates to replace Skelton, including junior Doug Papy, junior college transfer Blake Wayne and sophomores James Avedesian, Benjamin Heiser and Ryan Higgins.

Bucknell was 4-7 overall and 2-4 in the Patriot last season. Exit coach Tim Landis, who accepted an assistant's position at San Jose State. Enter 10-year Rutgers assistant Joe Susan, whose one and only season as a head coach produced an undefeated campaign (10-0) at Davidson in 2000.

The Bison upset Holy Cross, 23-17, in the regular-season finale last year, so they'll have that victory to build upon in 2010.

C.J. Hopson returns as a real double threat at QB, where he was sensational against the Crusaders with 29 carries for 189 yards in '09.

Last season was a difficult one for Georgetown, which finished 0-11 overall and 0-6 in the Patriot. And the 2010 campaign won't likely start well with three straight road games at Davidson, Lafayette and Yale. The Hoyas lost 22 seniors from last year's team.

Move over hoops— Butler football making some noise

By Steve Silverman

The Pioneer Football League had a three-headed race for the league championship last year that came down to the final week of the season.

Butler, Dayton and Drake were all unbeaten in league competition as the season roared into the homestretch. The schedule-makers must have been prescient because those three teams played each other in the final three weeks of the season. First, Butler squeaked past Dayton 31-28 in Week 10. The following Saturday, Dayton bounced back with a 23-6 win over Drake. In the final week, Butler edged Drake 20-17. The Bulldogs would have been the outright conference champs if they hadn't dropped a 36-7 decision to hard-charging Jacksonville the week between their games against Dayton and Drake.

By virtue of their wins over Dayton and Drake, the Bulldogs were the Pioneer's representative in the Gridiron Classic, where Butler came away with a thrilling 28-23 win over Northeast Conference champion Central Connecticut State. Now the team should be poised to contend for Pioneer honors in 2010.

Butler (11-1 overall, 7-1 PFL) was supposed to be a middle-of-the-pack team in 2009, but coach Jeff Voris and quarterback Andrew Huck would have none of that. Voris earned the league's 2009 Coach of the Year award and Huck was one of its best quarterbacks, culminating his season with an MVP performance in the Gridiron Classic against Central Connecticut State. Huck enters his junior season with a ton of momentum after completing 233 passes for 2,454 yards with 21 touchdowns and 11 interceptions last year. He moves well in the pocket, finds secondary receivers and throws an accurate pass with plenty of zip on it.

Huck received plenty of help from running back Scott Gray, who returns for his senior season after rushing for 868 yards and 5.1 yards per carry. Wide receiver Zach Watkins also returns. The junior caught a team-high 78 passes and was dependable when it came to making plays on third down.

The Bulldogs are a lot more than an offensive machine, though, as proven by safety Mark Giacomantonio, who returns after topping the PFL with five interceptions last season. Linebacker Nick Caldicott is a sure tackler who led Butler with 70 stops. Defensive lineman Grant Hunter is coming off a 10-sack season.

Jacksonville (7-4, 6-2) finished a game behind the league's co-leaders but should be back in the title hunt in 2010. Quarterback Josh McGregor returns after an excellent season in which he completed 178 passes for 2,693 yards with 31 touchdowns and seven interceptions. Josh Philpart is a go-to receiver who caught 54 passes for 912 yards with 13 touchdowns last year. The Dolphins' offense should be difficult to slow down again.

Dayton (9-2, 7-1) has a gaping hole to fill with the graduation of 2009 PFL Offensive Player of the Year Steve Valentino, who led all conference quarterbacks in rushing and was second in passing last season. The Flyers will try to use their running game to get back into a winning position. Look for Brian Mack to carry much of the load after rushing for 399 yards and four TDs as a redshirt freshman.

Drake (8-3, 6-2) has some rebuilding to do with the losses of all-league players in running back Steve Platek, tight end Frank Pucher, defensive lineman Dain Taylor and linebacker Cale Hunt. However, linebacker Tyler Moorehead returns for his sophomore season and should be among the most dangerous defensive players in the league after recording 6.1 tackles per game and a Pioneer-leading four forced fumbles in 2009.

Marist (7-4, 5-3) is on the upswing after the Red Foxes tied a team record with seven victories that included a six-game winning streak. Coach Jim Parady believes Marist is primed to build on that momentum.

Junior cornerback Jaquan Bryant returns after recording a team-high five interceptions in 2009, two of which he returned for touchdowns. Junior Tommy Reilly takes over at quarterback after completing 67.3 percent of his passes in spot duty last year.

Davidson (3-7, 3-5) hopes to improve its standing in the Pioneer behind the ground game of senior Kenny Mantuo and the hard hitting of senior linebacker Daniel Astrop. Mantuo led Davidson in rushing with 626 yards and five touchdowns. Astrop paced the Wildcats in tackles with 68 stops a year ago. He also had 3.5 sacks, five tackles for loss and two forced fumbles.

San Diego (4-7, 3-5) should not be overlooked, especially on offense. The Toreros have one of the league's most exciting players in wide receiver Kyle Warren, who made all of his receptions count as a freshman last year. He caught 11 passes for 338 yards, with six of those catches going for touchdowns.

Morehead State (3-8, 1-7) will have to overcome the loss of Pioneer Defensive Player of the Year Wes McDermott, an All-America linebacker who had 109 tackles last season. The Eagles will look to his younger brother as a leader on offense this season. As a sophomore, halfback Ronnie McDermott led Morehead State with 30 receptions.

In just its second season of fielding a team, Campbell (3-8, 2-6) picked up two wins in its final four games to give coach Dale Steele something to build on in 2010. Sophomore quarterback Daniel Polk is athletic (572 rushing yards in 2009), but he has to show significant improvement after completing just 53.2 percent of his passes as a freshman.

Valparaiso (1-10, 0-8) has a lot of work to do after last season's misery. New coach Dale Carlson says every position is wide open for competition. A key player is junior QB Bobby Wysocki, who is athletic but needs to work on his accuracy after completing just 41.2 percent of his passes last year.

GAME TO WATCH

10/09/10 Elon at Appalachian State

With Armanti Edwards gone, is this the year Elon overtakes ASU for the top spot in the SoCon? A win here would go a long way, but it'll be tough: The Mountaineers haven't lost a home conference game since Oct. 20, 2007.

Phoenix could rise to finally knock ASU off of SoCon perch

By Matt McKenzie
Assistant Editor

Appalachian State has become synonymous with "Southern Conference champion" of late, as the Mountaineers have either won outright or shared the league title in each of the last five seasons.

If ASU hopes to make it six straight, it will have to do so without the security blanket of do-everything quarterback Armanti Edwards, whose stellar four-year career placed him among the best ever in the FCS.

"I try to be pretty objective about it because, truthfully, we didn't know Armanti was going to be what I call a 'super player,'" says Mountaineers coach Jerry Moore of losing the first two-time recipient of the Walter Payton Award, given annually to the top player in the FCS. "We're counting on new leadership to counter some of the gleam that Armanti had. But I don't think anyone expects (any of this year's players) to be Armanti."

While ASU must find a new QB, the cupboard is far from bare. The Mountaineers return running back Devon Moore, receivers Brian Quick, Matt Cline and CoCo Hillary and two first-team All-America defenders.

"I don't think there's any question they're still the benchmark," says Elon coach Pete Lembo of the Mountaineers. "When you look at the resources they've put into their program ... it's not just the wins and losses. It's everything they do up there."

Lembo guided the Phoenix to their first-ever playoff appearance last season, and is 17-6 in the SoCon over the last three years—a far cry from Elon's doormat reputation when it first joined the conference in 2003.

"When you think about where Elon started, it was not only one of the worst programs in the conference, but maybe in the country," Lembo says. "We feel good about how far we've come. The question now is, can we maintain that high level and find a way to win against Appalachian and the other good playoff-caliber programs?"

Like ASU, Elon will be missing a major offensive weapon, All-America wideout Terrell Hudgins (the FCS' all-time leader in receiving yards), but has 13 starters back. Samford and Wofford present as challengers, while the major coaching storyline is former assistant Jeff Monken coming back to Georgia Southern, where he plans to once again implement the triple-option offense the Eagles had long been known for until recent years.

It's Year One A.A. (After Armanti) for Appalachian State (11-3 overall, 8-0 Southern). But with five first-team all-conference picks returning, the Mountaineers will once again be in line for a deep postseason run. Leading the offensive returnees is senior running back Devon Moore, who led the SoCon with 1,374 rushing yards and 19 TDs last season.

As to who will replace Edwards, it shapes up as a two-way battle between junior DeAndre Presley and redshirt freshman Jamal Jackson. Coach Jerry Moore was hesitant to name a starter, even after spring practice, but was impressed with both players.

"The edge that DeAndre has is experience; he's started for us and is very dependable," Moore says. "And everybody's excited about Jamal because he's got a terrific arm. He's just having to learn a lot right now."

"Both of them really ran hard in the spring, and that excited me. Both are tough kids and that's what we're looking for. If you watched Armanti, you know that."

The Mountaineers also return four of five starting offensive linemen and their top three receivers in Brian Quick, Matt Cline and CoCo Hillary. (Hillary was arrested and charged with DUI in the offseason, but Moore said he would wait until the case went through the legal system before deciding any disciplinary action.) Senior linebacker D.J. Smith and defensive back Mark LeGree, both 2009 first-team All Americans, anchor the defensive unit, along with all-conference end Jabari Fletcher.

Elon (9-3, 7-1) returns the conference's leading passer, Scott Riddle (3,345 yards, 23 TDs in '09), and third-best rusher in Jamal Shuman (677 yards). However, the Phoenix must find a new go-to wideout with the graduation of the program's best ever at that position, Terrell Hudgins. Still, coach Pete Lembo says there are positives in Hudgins' absence.

"We're looking for Scott's continued progress in being a student of the game," Lembo says. "Losing Hudgins could be a good thing in where he's not relying on one guy and having to spread out his passes."

Elon will also have to replace three All-SoCon picks on defense, including Andre Campbell, who led the conference in tackles for loss (16.5). Senior linebacker Brandon Ward and defensive back Terrell Wilson highlight the returnees, and Lembo is high on sophomore Dale Riley, who is making the move from outside linebacker to safety.

Despite joining the conference just three years ago, Samford (5-6, 3-5) is poised to make noise in the Southern this season with the return of 15 starters. Senior running back Chris Evans led the SoCon in rushing in 2009 with 104.7 yards per game.

Also back is QB Dustin Taliaferro and wideout Riley Hawkins (638 yards, 4 TDs). The Bulldogs will count on Hawkins and Richie Fordham to make up for the loss of Jonathan Lowery, the school's third all-time leading receiver.

Where Samford really excels is on defense, as the team was second in the SoCon for both total defense (284.5 yards per game) and scoring defense (17.5 points) last season. All-SoCon linebacker Bryce Smith, who has 201 tackles and nine interceptions for his career, is the heart and soul of the unit.

Last year was a season unlike any other for coach Mike Ayers at Wofford (3-8, 2-6), which suffered its worst record since joining the conference in 1997. It began with the news that tailback Jeremy Marshall would have to take a medical redshirt while still recovering from a torn ACL suffered in 2008. Things only got worse from there, as the Terriers lost several key players to injury throughout the season.

The lack of depth was felt hardest on defense, as Wofford gave up a league-high 33.5 points a game, including four contests in which the Terriers allowed at least 40 points. Linebackers SeQuan Stanley and Mike Niam (who missed nearly all of 2009 after a knee injury) highlight the returnees, along with safety Tommy Irvin, who led the team in tackles last season.

Wofford's option-oriented "wingbone" offense is always tough to plan against, and it resulted in three Terriers ranking among the SoCon's top 10 rushers last season. And that trio—quarterback Mitch Allen, halfback Mike Rucker and fullback Michael Scott—returns intact for 2010. If Marshall can come back healthy and join that group, the Terriers should be able to make the dismal '09 campaign a distant memory.

The most improved team in the league last year was Chattanooga (6-5, 4-4), which won six games under first-year coach Russ Heusman after just one victory in 2008. A big reason for the turnaround was the Mocs' defense, which ranked third overall in yards allowed per game (307.7) and decreased its points-allowed average from 37.9 in '08 to 25.7 last season.

Heusman will miss the services of defensive lineman Josh Beard, the 2009 SoCon

Defensive Player of the Year, but returns sophomore end Joshua Williams (7 sacks) and the all-conference secondary tandem of Jordan Tippit (5 INTs) and Buster Skrine.

Quarterback B.J. Coleman was a late transfer from Tennessee last May, and immediately helped the Mocs' offense, throwing for 2,348 yards and 17 TDs. However, the graduation of two starting receivers leaves senior Chris Pitchford (528 receiving yards, 5 TDs) as the only experienced wideout.

Chattanooga's running backs have had problems staying healthy in the past, and that continued this offseason as Bryan Fitzgerald was held out of spring practice while still recovering from a foot injury suffered last October. If he's ready by fall, Fitzgerald will join a mix that includes Erroll Wynn (who redshirted last year after a broken hand and foot in 2008) and sophomores J.J. Jackson and Chris Awuah.

After taking the Paladins to the playoffs in four of his first five years, it's now been three straight campaigns without a postseason appearance for coach Bobby Lamb, causing unrest among the Furman (6-5, 5-3) faithful.

The team will start a new signal-caller with Jordan Sorrells having graduated, and coming out of spring practice, it looked to be a battle between junior Chris Forcier and senior Cody Worley. Forcier transferred from UCLA last year and played sparingly in seven games, while Worley saw action in three contests.

The Paladins' other offensive skill players are strong, led by tailbacks Tersoo Uhaa (535 rushing yards, 13 TDs) and All-SoCon Freshman Jerry Williams (483, 3). Whoever wins the QB job will have an experienced group to throw to, including all-conference wideout Adam Mims (878 receiving yards, 4 TDs) and juniors David Hendrix (370, 2) and Sederrick Cunningham (327, 1).

Defense is where Furman must improve if it wants to get back into the conference title hunt. Last season, the Paladins surrendered a school-record 431.3 yards a game, last in the SoCon. Junior linebacker Kadarion Anderson, a third-team All-American in 2009, and all-league cornerback Ryan Steed will anchor the unit.

Western Carolina (2-9, 1-7) coach Dennis Wagner turned down a position to join the staff of new Kansas coach Turner Gill during the offseason, and will continue his focus on rebuilding the Catamounts. Wagner is just 5-18 overall in his first two seasons, but recently received a contract extension and has recruited well during his short time in Cullowhee, N.C.

One of those recruits was running back Michael Johnson, who was named the SoCon Freshman of the Year after rushing for 568 yards and four touchdowns in 2009. Quarterback Zack Jaynes (1,790 passing yards, 9 TDs) will try to bring the Catamounts out of the scoring cellar (they averaged a conference-low 14.1 points a game), but may have some competition for his job from Connecticut transfer Casey Turner. Another transfer, Deja Alexander (Central Michigan), has the potential to be Wagner's latest recruiting gem.

Redshirt freshman Randy Pressley, who came to WCU as a quarterback, will switch to the other side of the ball and play linebacker in 2010. He'll have a good chance for playing time after Western lost two All-SoCon picks at that spot to graduation.

Jeff Monken was hired at Georgia Southern (5-6, 4-4) in the offseason, marking the program's fourth coach in the last eight years. The good news for Eagles fans is that Monken plans to reintroduce the triple-option offense, which helped Georgia Southern win six national championships between 1985 and 2000.

Monken, who was an assistant at GSU from 1997-2001 (during which the Eagles won two FCS titles) and served as special teams coordinator under former Eagles head coach Paul Johnson at both Georgia Tech and Navy, is also changing the team's defense to a 4-3 scheme.

The Eagles will be without last year's starters at quarterback (Lee Chapple) and running back (Adam Urbano), as both asked for their release from the university. Transfer Jaybo Shaw, who has experience running the triple option as Georgia Tech's backup QB the last two years, will be eligible in the fall and could start immediately. Heading up the defensive returnees are 6-2, 300-pound sophomore Brent Russell (6 sacks), a first-team All-SoCon pick, and linebacker Dion DuBose (85 tackles).

It was an offseason of chaos and turmoil for The Citadel (4-7, 2-6), one that saw the team's new defensive coordinator, Mark Collins, leave for the NFL just a month after he was hired, and the shocking arrest of one of the Bulldogs' most promising players.

Quarterback Miguel Starks, who looked to be the top candidate to start in The Citadel's new triple-option offense, was charged in February with armed robbery, first-degree burglary, kidnapping and possession of a firearm during the commission of a violent crime. The victim in the alleged crime was Bulldogs assistant Josh Harpe, who has since left the staff.

This came after Bart Blanchard, the starting signal-caller for most of last year, decided to not return for his senior campaign, and reserve QB Tommy Edwards announced he was transferring. That left junior Luke Caldwell, who played receiver for the Bulldogs in his first two years, as the No. 1 QB in the spring. Citadel also has to replace key starters along its defensive front, but returns a solid secondary featuring senior Cortez Allen and sophomore Joseph Boateng.

GAME TO WATCH

10/09/10 Stephen F. Austin at McNeese State

It's early in the season for a showdown, but the winner of this game will have the inside track for the Southland title and an automatic FCS playoff bid.

Look for Moses to command 'Jacks to another league title

By Scott Rabalais
Correspondent

It was just three years ago when Stephen F. Austin was nothing more than a Southland Conference doormat, as other conference teams fattened up during a season in which the Lumberjacks went 0-11. That was coach J.C. Harper's first year, and after that campaign he brought in new coordinators on both sides of the ball and the team changed to a wide-open passing attack.

Everything fell into place for Stephen F. Austin last year, as the Lumberjacks captured a share of the Southland title (their first since 1999) and received the league's automatic FCS playoff bid. Harper was also named the Southland's Coach of the Year, and quarterback Jeremy Moses was named the conference's Co-Player of the Year.

Backed by 16 returning starters (including Moses), Stephen F. Austin is primed for a repeat Southland championship, but it will have to fend off McNeese State, which must replace some key starters on offense.

Quarterback Jeremy Moses has been a big part of Stephen F. Austin's (10-3 overall, 6-1 Southland) resurgence, throwing for 8,150 yards and 81 touchdowns over the last two years. In 2009, Moses helped the Lumberjacks to the second round of the FCS playoffs, where the team lost to eventual finalist Montana.

Moses returns for his junior campaign, but another 4,000-yard season will be a challenge with Stephen F. Austin graduating its top two receivers and running backs. Fortunately, the Lumberjacks can rely on a defense that returns eight starters, led by two-time All-America linebacker Jabara Williams. The team returns 40 lettermen in all, including 2009 Southland Newcomer of the Year Andre Banks at cornerback.

As usual, McNeese State (9-3, 6-1) will be expected to contend for the Southland championship, especially since the Cowboys play host to Stephen F. Austin in October. Unfortunately, the Lumberjacks' strength is the Cowboys' weakness. Gone for McNeese is quarterback Derrick Fourroux, a four-year starter. A raft of candidates for the 2010 job includes Derek's younger brother, Zack, but no one has yet to take a college snap.

Running back Toddrick Pendland is also gone, but the Cowboys return Champlain Babin, who rushed for 349 yards and four TDs in 2009.

Every starter is back on defense, led by All-Southland free safety Malcolm Bronson and linebacker Deron Minor.

Spring football ended at Texas State (7-4, 5-2) with no replacement named for four-year starter Bradley

George at quarterback. Tim Hawkins and newcomer Eric Soza are the top contenders, while highly touted freshman Tyler Arndt will get a chance if he can grasp the offense.

Boosting the Bobcats will be the return of wide receiver Da'Marcus Griggs (who ranked ninth in the FCS with 12.1 catches per game last year) and senior running back Karrington Bush, who rushed for 1,065 yards in 2008. The defense, led by linebackers Marcus Clark (a three-year starter) and Bryan Iwuji, is expected to be strong.

The Southland's version of a dark-horse contender could be Southeastern Louisiana (6-5, 4-3). After posting their best season since joining the conference in 2005, the Lions welcome back 18 starters and 51 lettermen, the most since 2003. Senior Tyler Beatty (a Baylor transfer) and sophomore B.J. Young will vie to replace graduated quarterback Brian Babin.

Expect whoever wins that job to lean on a running game led by bruising 240-pound Zeke Jones. Ten starters return on defense, among them 2009 Southland interceptions leader Re'Keem Wilson and all-conference linebacker Mark Newbill.

A year after posting the Southland's best record in 2008, Central Arkansas (5-7, 2-5) must try to resume its upward migration after losing a 23-man senior class that included quarterback Robbie Park and all-time leading rusher Brent Grimes. Nathan Dick, a former University of Arkansas player, or Wyrnick Smothers will replace Park at quarterback, while the trio of Jackie Hinton, Terence Bobo and Anthony Blackmon looks to fill Grimes' void. All-Southland end Markell Carter anchors the defensive front.

Northwestern State (0-11, 0-7) returns only three starters on defense. Maybe that's a good thing after the Demons were gashed for 36.5 points and 422.1 yards per game in their first-ever 0-11 campaign.

Two highly ranked recruiting classes hold promise, but Bradley Dale Peveto's second year as coach will probably still be a struggle. Peveto played 14 true freshmen in 2009, and a comparable number is expected to see the field this fall.

After struggling to score or produce yardage in 2009, Nicholls State (3-8, 2-5) turns to veteran offensive coach Charlie Stubbs to revive the Colonels' football fortunes. Stubbs—whose 30-plus-year career has included stops as an assistant at Alabama, Louisville, Oregon State and BYU—chucked Nicholls' triple option and installed a pro-style passing attack.

The biggest test will be converting run-first quarterback LaQuintin Caston into more of a thrower. Caston completed just 45 percent of his passes in 2009. End Marquis Russell, linebacker Anri Stewart and All-Southland cornerback candidate Bobby Felder lead the defense.

The realistic expectations in Huntsville, Texas, are for 2010 to be a rebuilding season at Sam Houston State (5-6, 3-4), which lost 26 seniors and returns just eight starters. Of those regulars, only three play offense. The defense will be spearheaded by sophomore safety Kenneth Jenkins and junior linebacker Will Henry (10.5 tackles for loss).

Bulldogs have the right bite for a MEAC threepeat

By Lut Williams
Black College Sports Page

South Carolina State established itself as the unquestioned king of MEAC football last year, capturing its second straight title and extending its conference win streak to 19 games. But the Bulldogs could not end the league's postseason drought (which now stands at 11 straight losses), as they fell to Appalachian State for the second straight year in the FCS playoffs.

Still, coach Buddy Pough's Bulldogs are clear favorites to make it three consecutive MEAC championships.

Florida A&M, Norfolk State and Morgan State will be breaking in new starting quarterbacks. Bethune-Cookman has a new coach in Brian Jenkins and will be adjusting to his style.

Hampton and North Carolina A&T should be better with coaches entering their second seasons, while youth will likely keep Delaware State and Howard from mounting serious challenges.

South Carolina State's (10-2 overall, 8-0 MEAC) hope for a third straight title rests in the hands of senior quarterback Malcolm Long, who looks to improve on his sterling regular-season numbers (208.6 passing yards per game, 20 TDs, 10 INTs).

Devin Wherry and Chris Merrill will get first crack at filling Will Ford's backfield spot, while Lennell Elmore and Richard Christie step into key receiver roles.

Linemen Josh Harrison, Johnny Culbreath and Juavahr Nathan are returning All-MEAC performers. Marshall McFadden (who missed last year with an injury), David Erby and Julius Wilkerson will form a trio of standout linebackers.

Florida A&M (8-3, 6-2) lost quarterback Curtis Pulley but returns Eddie Battle and Martin Ukpai. Wide receivers Kevin Elliott (44 catches, 554 yards, 7 TDs) and Isaac West (36, 641, 2) make up the league's best tandem.

Middle linebacker Alvis Graham, who led the team in tackles (69) last season, will be joined on the outside by touted Winston-Salem State transfer Joshua Newkirk.

If coach Pete Adrian can develop a quarterback, look for Norfolk State (7-4, 5-3) to challenge South Carolina State. The Spartans return six All-MEAC players in offensive linemen William Falakiseni, Kendall Noble and Carlton Ford; running back DeAngelo Branche; tight end Sherron Childress, and defensive lineman Josh Turner.

Junior college transfer Chris Walley and redshirt freshman Kevin Leatherwood are both looking to replace departed QB Dennis Brown.

Syracuse transfer David Legree filled in for injured quarterback Herbert Bynes last year and the two should battle in the offseason, giving Hampton (5-6, 3-5) and coach Donovan Rose stability under center. Donte Davis, another Syracuse transfer, joins Isiah Thomas (27 catches, 6 TDs) and Reginald Hicks (26, 3) at wide receiver.

The Pirates have strong linebackers in All-MEAC senior Julio Sanchez, Jacobi Fenner and Gerald Francios, but end Brandon Peguese may be the best defender in the league.

Coach Donald Hill-Eley is counting on quarterbacks Donovan Dickerson and Delonte Williams to lead an offensive resurgence at Morgan State (6-5, 4-4). Allen Singletary takes over as the feature back and will get help from Brian Mann and newcomer Jordan Brooks.

Winfred Diggs (38 catches) and All-MEAC tight end Lamont Bryant (18 catches, 2 TDs) are solid receivers.

The defense lost two stars in linebacker George Howard, the 2009 MEAC Player of the Year, but returns All-MEAC defensive back Darren McKhan.

North Carolina A&T (5-6, 3-5) coach Alonzo Lee found a player to help the Aggies move up in the standings in running back Mike Mayhew (471 yards, 6 TDs), who was the MEAC's top rookie in '09.

Wide receiver Wallace Miles (42 catches, 3 TDs) is coming off a breakout year, as are All-MEAC defensive backs Justin Ferrell and Quay Long. Lewis Kindle has earned the quarterback job and will throw to Larry Raper and Buster Cooper.

Linebacker Brandon Jackson returns after leading the team with 69 tackles.

Coach Al Lavan has senior leadership from quarterback Anthony Glauf and wide receiver Larrone Moore on a Delaware State (4-7, 3-5) team dominated by underclassmen. Wideout Darius Jackson (41 catches) and running back Jaashawn Jones (632 yards, 5 TDs) were productive as sophomores and should again figure into the offense.

All-MEAC defensive tackle Andre Carroll led the Hornets in tackles (56) last year.

After losing four straight games to open the season, coach Alvin Wyatt lost his

After years of domination by Hampton, the pendulum has apparently swung to the Norfolk side of this across-the-Chesapeake Bay rivalry after the Spartans' 46-6 win last year, their second in three seasons. The winner of this matchup may be South Carolina State's chief challenger for the top of the MEAC.

Matthew Johnson remains at quarterback but will throw to former signal-callers Maurice Francois and Michael Adams and JeVaughn Reams.

The Wildcats are solid at linebacker with Reggie Sandilands, Ryan Davis and Ryan Lewis.

A young Howard (2-9, 0-8) squad should be better in 2010, as coach Carey Bailey looks to take advantage of the running and passing skills of QB Jared Dorsey, receiver Willie Carter, slotback Brandon Drayton and running back Andra Williams.

Linebacker Keith Pough (12.5 tackles for loss) was a big surprise as a freshman and will team with Patrick Jean-Mary to give the Bison an improved defense.

GAME TO WATCH

09/25/10 Grambling State vs. Prairie View A&M at Dallas (Cotton Bowl)

Prairie View finally hurdled past Grambling last year, clipping the Tigers 35-32 in a down-to-the-wire thriller en route to winning its first SWAC title in 45 years. With Prairie View now a contender, this annual game at the state fair can now truly be called a "classic."

Prairie View getting cozy atop SWAC throne

By Lut Williams
Black College Sports Page

Not only did Prairie View A&M establish itself as a challenger for the SWAC's top honors last season, the Panthers finally broke through, going undefeated in conference play, including getting past West Division nemesis Grambling State for the first time in Prairie View coach Henry Frazier's tenure.

The 30-24 title game victory over East Division champion Alabama A&M completed a remarkable turnaround for a program that had languished at the bottom of the league for more than four decades and erased the memory of a record 80-game losing streak in the 1990s that had come to define the Panthers. Frazier earned 10 Coach-of-the-Year awards, including The Sports Network's Eddie Robinson Award, which is given to the best FCS coach in the nation.

Texas Southern, whose SWAC title drought (since 1968) is almost as long as Prairie View's was, posted its first winning record since 2000 and moved past Southern and Arkansas-Pine Bluff to tie Grambling for second in the SWAC West. Third-year coach Johnnie Cole has the Tigers on the rise.

Alcorn State, which has not won a SWAC title since 1994, made a run at Alabama A&M in the East under new coach Earnest Collins. The Braves tied for second in the East with Jackson State, taking wins over Alabama A&M and Jackson State.

The rise of these once-dormant programs may have cost two coaches their jobs. Southern, which tied with Arkansas-Pine Bluff at the bottom of the SWAC West, parted ways with 17-year mentor Pete Richardson in favor of former NFL rushing standout Lyvonnia "Stump" Mitchell. Mississippi Valley State coach Willie Totten resigned after eight seasons of failing to get the Delta Devils to a championship game. He has been replaced by former North Alabama assistant Karl Morgan.

EAST DIVISION

Talented quarterback Deaunte Mason became the starter late in the season and led Alabama A&M (7-5 overall, 4-3 SWAC) to the East Division title last year. But he will now be without running back Ulysses Banks and wide receiver Thomas Harris, who ended their careers as the school's all-time leaders in rushing and receiving, respectively. Rashad Johnson (38 receptions, 2 TDs) will likely take over for Harris, while senior Tony Green will get first shot at the backfield slot. Anquez Jackson is among three starters returning on the offensive line.

The Bulldogs will feature three All-SWAC defenders in lineman Frank Kearse, linebacker Afu Okosun and cornerback Korey Morrison.

Wideouts Edward Johnson (41 receptions, 6 TDs) and Terrance Lewis (21, 3) are waiting to see who will replace playmaking quarterback Tim Buckley, who took nearly all the snaps at Alcorn State (3-6, 3-4) last season. Senior Terrance Barnes, sophomore Darius Smith and three freshmen will vie for the position. Arnold Walker (448 yards, 3 TDs) and Gabriel Nash are the chief backfield weapons.

Defensive end Malcolm Taylor, who led the SWAC in sacks (9.0), middle linebacker Herve Tonye-Tonye and safety Josh Cragin will shore up a unit that was last in scoring defense (32.2 ppg) a year ago.

While leading the SWAC in total yards per game (259.9) and pass defense (154.7 ypg), the Jackson State (3-7, 3-4) offense was among the most anemic in the FCS last season, averaging 13.9 points per game. That prompted coach Rick Comegy to jettison James Woody in favor of new offensive coordinator Earnest Wilson and his "Air-Raid" offense. Quarterback Dedric McDonald will get the first crack at leading a new offense that will feature wide receiver Keenan Tillman and running back Bloi-Dei Dorzon (478 yards, 3 TDs) as the prime weapons.

The defense lost its top three tacklers but returns ball-poaching safeties Kerry Hoskins (7 INTs) and Ryan Rich (6). Minnesota transfer Tim Dandridge will also help in the secondary. End Sam Washington returns from injury to join Neal Pogue and Donavan Robinson on the defensive front.

Coach Reggie Barlow continues to look for answers at Alabama State (4-7, 1-6) and has brought in former Grambling head coach Melvin Spears (fresh off a stint as offensive coordinator at Texas Southern) to ratchet up an offense that put up just 16.6 points per game last season. Barlow hopes to employ a vertical passing game that will take advantage of the skills of wideouts Nicholas Andrews (47 receptions, 803 yards, 5 TDs) and Darius Mathis (36, 398, 4). Senior Anthony Speight steps into the quarterback role, with Tim Clark the likely starter at running back. Bruce Beal and Tim Moore are returning starters on the offensive line.

Tackle Kynjee Cotton, linebacker Anthony Burney, cornerback Donovan Masline and safety Kejuan Riley lead a stingy defense that gave up just 20.5 points per game a year ago, third best in the league.

New Mississippi Valley State (3-8, 1-6) coach Karl Morgan brings a lot of defensive credentials to his new post and will have linebacker Rory Malone and cornerback Markkus Davis as leaders on that side of the ball. Reginald Foster and DeKeoven Burrell are also holdover starters on defense.

Morgan plans to use a ball-control offense over the pass-first scheme employed by former coach Willie Totten. While quarterback is an open spot with Marvin Pittman and Anthony Bowie competing for the job, running backs

CHRISTIAN ANTHONY GRAMBLING STATE

Stephen Robert, Milton Gaston and Chris Watkins should see more of a workload. Chris Williams (32 receptions), Brandon Stargell (31) and Paul Cox (20) are proven receivers.

WEST DIVISION

The chance for a repeat championship at Prairie View A&M (9-1, 7-0) is buoyed by the return of 18 starters—10 on offense and eight on defense. The reigning SWAC Offensive Player of the Year, quarterback K.J. Black, finished second in the FCS in passing efficiency while throwing for 2,033 yards and 22 touchdowns and just four interceptions. Black and his fellow offensive catalyst, running back Donald Babers (919 yards, 9 TDs), should improve their numbers playing behind a line that returns all of its starters, including All-SWAC honorees James Dekle and Tim Tusey.

All-conference defensive end Quinton Spears and cornerback Chris Adingupu (2009's team tackles leader) head up a defensive corps that gave up a conference-low 16.6 points per game last year. Pedro Ventura, a first-team All-SWAC punter, is a valued commodity on special teams.

Coach Rod Broadway's Grambling State (7-4, 5-2) squad matches up well against Prairie View A&M. Quarterback Greg Dillon (1,747 passing yards, 13 TDs), running backs Frank Warren (926 rushing yards) and Cornelius Walker (645), All-SWAC return specialist Kiare Thompson and all-conference kicker Ari Johnson (90 points) return to an offense that topped the league in scoring (33.5 ppg) last year.

Reigning SWAC Defensive Player of the Year Christian Anthony (76 tackles, 15 for loss, 8 sacks, 5 INTs, 5 forced fumbles, 2 TDs) returns to lead the defense, along with junior linebacker Cliff Exama, who was second in league tackles (8.5 per game) in '09.

A young Texas Southern (6-5, 5-2) team closed with a flourish last season, winning five of its final six games and establishing itself as a legitimate title contender. Linebacker Dejuan Fulghum and cornerbacks De'Markus Washington and Robert Joseph are the ringleaders on a defense that kept the Tigers close in all of their conference contests.

Last season's SWAC Newcomer of the Year, quarterback Arvell Nelson (2,392 yards, 12 TDs), needs to cut down on his 13 interceptions from a year ago. He'll get help from returning wide receivers Joseph Anderson (51 catches, 7 TDs) and Joseph Warren (31 receptions) and running back Martin Gilbert, who rushed for 644 yards and six scores in '09. Five starters on the offensive line and kicker Robert Hersh are also back.

Coach Monte Coleman, who won three Super Bowl rings as a longtime Washington Redskins linebacker, added former NFL defensive cohorts Vernon Dean and Dennis Winston and new offensive coordinator Jerry Mack to the Arkansas-Pine Bluff (5-5, 3-4) coaching staff, hoping for bumps in production. Dean and Winston will have defensive lineman Ibrahim Abdulai and cornerback Raymond Duplechain as the prized pupils on a unit that lost its five top tacklers.

Mack will choose between holdovers Josh Boudreaux and Rontrell Bailey at quarterback, while Dhabion Woodfin steps into the lead role at running back, replacing Mickey Dean. Raymond Webber (36 receptions, 4 TDs) and Ladarius Eckwood are the top receivers.

New coach Stump Mitchell is starting from scratch at Southern (6-5, 3-4). The Jaguars lost the SWAC's top passer (Bryant Lee), top receiver (Juamorris Stewart), top tight end (Warren Matthews) and the team's leading rusher (Brian Threat), not to mention the SWAC's dean of coaches in Pete Richardson. Mitchell says discipline on the field and in the classroom are the keys to revitalizing the program.

The new coach will build around running back Gary Hollimon (346 yards, 6 TDs) and safety/return man Jason House, who had a league-best 10 interceptions last season.

DIVISION II

PREVIEW

BLAKE BOLLES
NORTHWEST MISSOURI STATE

Road to D2 title will again go through Northwest Missouri or Grand Valley

By Gregg Dewalt, Florence (Ala.) TimesDaily

There's a pretty good case to be made that Northwest Missouri State has become the dominant football program on the Division II landscape.

Consider the fact that coach Mel Tjeerdsma's team has made it to the championship game seven times since 1998.

On three occasions—including 2009—the Bearcats returned home to Maryville, Mo., with a national title in hand. Each year from 2005 to 2008, Northwest Missouri played for the championship at Braly Municipal Stadium in Florence, Ala., but went home empty-handed. Finally, the Bearcats snapped a four-game losing streak in the title game last December, edging past Grand Valley State 30-23.

And the four losses in the championship game were by a total of 19 points.

This season, Northwest Missouri will try to extend its record streak of championship game appearances to six, and the Bearcats are favored to add another trophy to their collection.

Tjeerdsma insists there is no secret formula to his success other than seeming to always have a senior group willing to lead.

"We do a lot with the seniors and they really take ownership of the team in their year," Tjeerdsma says. "No matter what they've accomplished so far, if they don't get it done their senior year, they feel like they have failed in some way."

Perhaps equally as important is that Tjeerdsma builds the bulk of his program with high school players, nearly all of whom redshirt their first season. The veteran coach has a select few transfers, but most players pay their dues by moving up in the program.

"That's the way we've been doing it since I took over in 1994," Tjeerdsma says. "We want to try to do it with high school kids. There's lots of ways to do it, but when you look at the teams that have won championships the last 15 years or so, almost all of them have had high school kids. We've had some good transfers, and Grand Valley (State) gets some, but we don't have many."

Grand Valley State has a pretty good case of its own when it comes to dominance. If Northwest Missouri State is No. 1, then the Lakers can be labeled No. 1-A. The Lakers own four national championships in six title game appearances since 2002, including back-to-back wins against Northwest Missouri in 2005-06.

This year, the Lakers will try to make it back to Florence with a new coach, Matt Mitchell, who was elevated from defensive coordinator when Chuck Martin joined former GVSU coach Brian Kelly at Notre Dame.

With more teams staking a claim to national prominence each season, the road to Florence gets tougher and tougher. One thing stays the same: To get to the championship game, at some point you have to beat the Bearcats or the Lakers.

GAMES TO WATCH

- Aug. 28 ▸ Minnesota-Duluth at Central Washington
- Sept. 2 ▸ Texas A&M-Kingsville at Northwest Missouri State
- Sept. 11 ▸ Hillsdale at Grand Valley State
- Nov. 6 ▸ California (Pa.) at Edinboro
- Nov. 6 ▸ Abilene Christian at West Texas A&M

There's no question Northwest Missouri State (14-1) is the team to beat. After winning the school's first national championship since 1999, Tjeerdsma's team returns 10 starters on offense, including the dynamic pass-catch combo of Blake Bolles (4,145 yards, 42 TD passes) and Jake Soy (27 TD catches). The Bearcats need to replace five defensive starters and running back LaRon Council, but Tjeerdsma likes to stockpile talent and there is plenty of it on the depth chart.

Mitchell is no stranger to Grand Valley State (13-2), but his view now is from the head coach's office. The defense, Mitchell's forté, should be among the best in the nation as seven of the top nine tacklers return. Danny Richard, an All-America lineman, is the defensive leader. Cornerback Rob Carlisle and safety Zach Breen return from injuries, giving the unit an added boost. Two transfers and an experienced offensive line should help Mitchell rebuild the offense. Eastern Michigan transfer Kyle McMahon will battle Marquel Neasman at quarterback, while Akron transfer Norman Shuford is in the mix at running back.

Coming off the first top-10 finish in school history and with a slew of returning offensive stars, West Liberty (11-2) appears primed to make a run at the national championship. Harlon Hill Trophy runner-up quarterback Zach Amedro returns after throwing for 4,945 yards and 49 touchdowns as a junior. Amedro's favorite targets, Ryan Travis and Kashif Walls, are also back after combining for 165 catches, 2,571 yards and 35 scores. Tailback Kevon Calhoun will see what he can do for an encore after rushing for 1,529 yards and 22 touchdowns in 2009. While the offensive parts seem to be in place for a title run, coach Roger Waialae's team must improve significantly on defense.

Minnesota-Duluth (11-2) remains the team to beat in the Northern Sun Intercollegiate Conference. The 2008 national champs have some holes to fill, but they welcome back the league's offensive and defensive players of the year. All-America running back Isaac Odim returns after rushing for 1,808 yards and 29 touchdowns; he'll continue to rewrite the school's record book. Linebacker Robbie Aurich led the nation's second-stringiest scoring defense (12.5 ppg) with 93 stops. California (Pa.) made it to the national semifinals before losing to eventual champ Northwest Missouri. The Vulcans (11-4) should be able to move the ball with eight returning offensive starters, including QB Josh Portis, wide receiver Terrance Moore and four linemen. Coach John Luckhardt has to rebuild the defense, however.

Nebraska-Kearney (11-2) breezed through the Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference last year and should make it two titles in a row if coach Darrell Morris can put together an offensive line to protect junior QB Jake Spitzlberger and open enough holes for running back Rustin Dring, who set a school record with 1,648 yards and 11 touchdowns in 2009.

Central Washington (12-1) led the nation in scoring defense (11.9 ppg) and topped the final regular-season poll, but coach Blaine Bennett has many holes to fill for the Wildcats to remain among the nation's elite. Eugene Germany and Adam Bighill return on defense after combining for 24 tackles for loss.

UNC Pembroke (9-2) qualified for the playoffs in just its third year of college football, and it appears the Braves are being built for the long run with 18 starters returning. Ten of those regulars, including safety Caylon Hann, form a unit that was 11th nationally in total defense.

Edinboro (9-4) tied a school record for wins last season. Redshirt freshman Cody Harris should take over for his brother, Trevor, at quarterback and will operate behind an experienced line that features first-team all-conference guard Rob Stoner. Edin-boro's defense experienced some ups and downs in 2009, but has a superb cornerback in Branden Williams, who had six interceptions.

Terry Bowden returns for a second season as coach at North Alabama (11-2) after keeping the Lions in the running for a national title with a huge influx of Division I transfers. Bowden might not bring in 24 D-I players like he did last year, but there are plenty of holes to fill with only five returning starters. All-conference linebacker Larry Wilson and nose guard Nate Frazier, a transfer from Navy who sat out last season, will lead the defense. Offensively, the Lions are looking for skill players after losing their quarterback, running back and top three receivers.

Carson-Newman (11-3) lost the bulk of the offensive stars from its NCAA semifinal appearance, and coach Ken Sparks is looking for a new quarterback and a replacement for All-America running back Buck Wakefield.

Minnesota State-Mankato (10-2) will try to extend its playoff streak to three behind sophomore running back Jake Aberg, who emerged with 1,201 yards and 10 touchdowns. Defensively, the Mavericks are in good shape with the return of six of their top nine tacklers, including defensive back Jesse Hamilton, who intercepted seven passes in 2009.

Hillsdale (10-3) is coming off its most successful season after winning its first playoff game and ending Grand Valley's five-year regular-season winning streak in the Great Lakes Intercollegiate Athletic Conference. The Chargers should be explosive on offense with QB Troy Weatherhead, 1,000-yard receiver Andre Holmes and three veteran linemen.

Coach Chris Thomsen says he believes this year's Abilene Christian (9-4) team might be his best since arriving in 2005. Known for their high-powered offense, the Wildcats might win with defense this year as four key players led by ends Aston Whiteside and Fred Thompson make up an experienced unit.

Tarleton State (10-3) has a familiar face at head coach as Cary Fowler moves up from defensive coordinator to take over for Sam McElroy, who left to become an assistant on Tommy Tuberville's new staff at Texas Tech. The expectations are high for Fowler, as he inherits a program that has gone 80-33 over the past decade. Fowler has some talent returning on offense, led by QB Scott Grantham and running back Evan Robertson, but the Texans lost several key players from a solid defensive unit.

Missouri Western (9-3) just missed a playoff appearance last year and settled for a Mineral Water Bowl win against Augustana. It was the fifth nine-win season for the Griffons in seven campaigns. With QB Drew Newhart and running back Thomas Hodges returning to the offense, a playoff run is very possible.

It's hard to find a more successful program than Tuskegee (10-2) over the last decade. The Golden Tigers were 101-16 and captured seven Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference championships from 2000-09. Coach Willie Slater's team shows no sign of letting up, either, with 16 starters returning from last season's Pioneer Bowl champion. Defensive ends Danny Anderson (9 sacks) and Darian Barnes (12.5) combined for 34.5 tackles for loss up front for Tuskegee in 2009.

Texas A&M-Kingsville (9-3) returned to national prominence with a solid 2009 season that included a heartbreaking 57-56 overtime loss to Lone Star Conference rival Tarleton State in the first round of the NCAA playoffs. Offensively, the Javelinas will rely on running back Fred Winborn, who finished with 1,295 yards and 17 touchdowns last year. Safety Delra Glover, who scored four defensive touchdowns, anchors the defense.

Shippensburg (9-3) was a surprise Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference-East winner and earned a first-round playoff bye before losing to West Division rival California (Pa.) in a rematch of their regular-season finale. The Red Raiders appear to have reversed a trend of losing the close ones. Coach Rocky Rees' team won four games by seven or fewer points last year. Leading rusher Kevin Herod (727 yards) will be prominent in Shippensburg's Wing-T offense.

Saginaw Valley (9-3) will try to make a run at the GLIAC title with senior Chuck Dowdell at quarterback, but the Cardinal have big holes to fill with the loss of linebacker John Jacobs and tight end Galen Stone.

Coach Denny Douds begins his 37th season at East Stroudsburg (8-4) with a veteran lineup that returns 15 starters, including Matt Marshall, who threw 26 TD passes as a first-year starter. Marshall should be well protected by four returning offensive linemen, while Ed Kiser (43 catches, 805 yards) leads a talented group of receivers. Defensively, linebacker Matt Freed has 258 tackles over the past two seasons and will head up a unit that returns seven starters.

West Texas A&M (7-5) rebounded from a slow start to win its final six games in 2009. With 17 returning starters the Buffs should challenge for a playoff berth and the Lone Star Conference title. All of the key skill players return on offense, while the linebacking and secondary units are back intact on defense.

Arkansas Tech (9-3) coach Steve Mullins must rebuild the Wonder Boys' offense after losing QB and Harlon Hill Trophy finalist Nick Graziano, the team's top two receivers and three linemen. The defense should improve in Jeff Byrd's second year as coordinator with eight of Tech's top 11 tacklers returning.

After qualifying for the playoffs for the first time in 34 years, the challenge for coach Bobby Wallace at West Alabama (8-5) is to make a return trip. The Tigers will rely on veteran QB Deon Williams and a signing class that includes 14 junior college players to make a run at the Gulf South Conference title.

Midwestern State (9-3) will shoot for its 11th straight winning season with Harlon Hill Trophy finalist Zack Eskridge at quarterback. The senior threw for a school-record 3,295 yards and 29 TDs in 2009.

PREVIEW

LEVELL COPPAGE
WISCONSIN-WHITEWATER

Whose turn will it be in the never-ending battle of 'Duelling Dynasties?'

By Mike Goens, Florence (Ala.) TimesDaily

Things can be frustrating at times for the other 233 teams competing in NCAA Division III football.

Until further notice, they've got to sit back and watch the dueling dynasties of Mount Union and Wisconsin-Whitewater, the two teams that have played for the past five national championships. For those who need a scorecard, Mount Union has a 3-2 lead in those five title games, but the Warhawks are defending champions.

Since 2005, the Purple Raiders own a 72-3 overall record, the best of any NCAA team regardless of division. Whitewater is two games off that pace at 70-5. The numbers speak volumes about the power structure in Division III.

"Clearly, they have both been strong, especially over the past five years—longer for Mount Union," Linfield coach Joseph Smith says. "We all want to be where they are in terms of consistency.

"What separates them is they both have exceptionally deep talent pools. They are able to reload at a high level, while most teams are not that deep. Most programs cannot afford injuries because the numbers are not there like at Mount Union and Whitewater."

For Whitewater coach Lance Leipold, the gap isn't as large as others think.

"Mount Union's 10 championships (since 1993) speak for themselves," Leipold says. "At any level, that is a great run. They have clearly earned the respect and recognition they have received. We've been fortunate over the last five years to maintain a level of consistency too, and that is a tribute to our players and assistant coaches.

"You have to stay grounded and focused because there are many other programs out there that are very capable of beating you and doing the things you've been able to do over the past five years. We see it in our conference every week, and you have excellent programs elsewhere. Division III is highly competitive."

Smith says his and other programs are close to reaching the level of Whitewater and Mount Union. The Wildcats won the championship in 2004, and Smith says his team was within a play or two of getting to the title game last year.

"There are seven or eight teams that are good enough, from a talent standpoint, to win a championship," Smith says. "We think we have a chance if we stay healthy."

Whitewater was the nation's best last year, with its closest challenges being 10-point wins over Linfield in the national semifinals and against Mount Union in the championship game. The Warhawks will be hard to beat again this year.

GAMES TO WATCH

- Sept. 18 ▶ Delaware Valley at Wesley
- Sept. 25 ▶ Hardin-Simmons at Mary Hardin-Baylor
- Sept. 25 ▶ Washington & Jefferson at Thomas More
- Sept. 25 ▶ Central at Coe
- Oct. 2 ▶ Ohio Northern at Mount Union
- Oct. 2 ▶ St. Thomas at Saint John's (Minn.)
- Nov. 6 ▶ North Central at Wheaton

Wisconsin-Whitewater has some holes to fill, especially at quarterback and on defense, but there is plenty of talent returning to make the Warhawks the team to beat once again. As Leipold puts it, "we have a chance to be a good football team if we are strong enough mentally to keep taking things a week at a time."

The Warhawks return Levell Copping, who most consider the best D3 running back in the country. He rushed for 2,107 yards and 35 touchdowns last year. Four offensive linemen—tackles Robbie Ustruck and Grant Murray and guards Mark Gawronski and Matt Weber—return after a dominating performance last season. Also back is wide receiver Aaron Rusch (72 catches) and tight end John Novak.

The only question on offense is at quarterback. Matt Blanchard, a transfer from Northern Michigan, will compete with sophomore Cory Knapp. Ironically, Blanchard's brother, Derek, was a finalist for the Gagliardi Award in 2007 (given to D3's most outstanding player) as an offensive lineman at Mount Union.

Only five starters return on defense, with major rebuilding needed in the secondary. Linebackers Greg Arnold and Sean Fancher will be leaders there.

Don't expect Mount Union to go quietly into the night. There's enormous pride in coach Larry Kehres' program. He has a 24-year record of 289-22-3 at Mount Union for a 92.5 winning percentage. The Purple Raiders are 139-5 with six national championships over the last decade.

On paper, it appears a rebuilding year is in store, with only five offensive and four defensive starters returning. However, 20 players on the two-deep roster from last year's championship game are back with plenty of playing experience.

The key offensive weapon is receiver Cecil Shorts III. He caught 100 passes for 1,736 yards and 19 touchdowns last year. Tight end Kyle Miller (21 catches, 353 yards) is a threat in the passing game. On defense, linebacker Sam Kershaw and tackle Lambert Budzinski will be heard from often.

Linfield has become a consistent contender in the national race and appears loaded for another run. Eight defensive starters return, including five all-conference performers from last year. Leading the secondary is safety Drew Fisher (73 tackles, 5 interceptions). Also expect big plays from Paul Nishizaki, Eric Hedin, Kole Krieger and Taylor Skore.

Only five starters are back on offense, but quarterback Aaron Boehme is one of them. Boehme passed for 3,261 yards and 33 touchdowns a year ago. Leading rusher Aaron Williams returns along with receivers Chris Slezak and Buddy Saxon and linemen Aaron Heston and Jordan Barnes.

At Saint John's (Minn.), legendary coach John Gagliardi looks to make a deeper run in the playoffs after losing in the first round a year ago. The Johnnies won their conference title for the 31st time last year and have now gone undefeated in the regular season 19 straight times.

Quarterback Joe Boyle is back to guide the offense, and he has help available with six other returning starters. Three of those are offensive linemen, which means running back Jakob Reding and tight end Josh Overman should be free to make big plays. Only four defensive starters return, with linemen Kyle Schroeder and Griffin Hayes and linebacker John Stanton being counted on heavily. Several players with game experience will fill in the gaps, though who will complete the secondary is unknown.

Wesley will again be explosive offensively, as quarterback Shane McSweeney is a double threat. He passed for 2,924 yards and 36 touchdowns and rushed for 718 yards and eight more scores in 2009. His favorite receiver, Ellis Krout, grabbed 56 passes, including 20 touchdowns. Tight end Sean McAndrew (33 catches, 520 yards, 10 TDs) is also dangerous. The issue on offense is replacing three starting linemen.

The Wolverines' defense also has impact players in safety Aaron Benson (7 INTs), end Chris Mayes (13 sacks) and linebacker Mike Asiedu (96 tackles).

Mary Hardin-Baylor is producing a little tradition of its own, joining Mount Union as the only two teams to win a playoff game in each of the past six seasons. The Cru will return 49 lettermen, including five starters each on both sides of the ball.

Running back Quincy Daniels has earned a medical redshirt based on a 2008 injury and will be hard to handle. Backup Rickie Williams won't be easy to rattle either. The news is even better at quarterback, where Kyle Noack and LiDarral Bailey are both back after sharing time a year ago. They are threats both running and passing. Ervin Johnson is the top returning receiver and center Dustin Davis leads an experienced offensive line. Linebackers Javicz Jones (71 tackles), Jerrad Jefferson and Ben Beckworth will take charge on defense.

Eighteen starters return at Delaware Valley, which advanced to the second round of the playoffs last season. And with a tough 2010 nonconference schedule, that experience will be invaluable. Kyle Gesswein (98 tackles, 11 sacks) is one of the nation's best linebackers. He'll lead other big defensive hitters in linebacker Chris James, safety Ryan McCullough and end Garrett Wooters. Quarterback Mark Hatty, who started one game last year and performed brilliantly, holds the key. Offensive tackles Mike Long and Mike Lewis will make room for tailback Matt Cook (1,312 rushing yards).

Wittenberg is back in the hunt for a national championship and has more wins (689) than any Division III program, along with two national crowns and two runner-up finishes. The Tigers have 13 starters back from a 12-1 squad. The strength will be on the lines. The offensive line, with four starters back, will be a key while a new quarterback gets settled. Tailback Corey Weber will be counted on early as well. On defense, three linemen led by standout Eddie Vallery return, along with linebackers Brad McKinley and Zach Hurtt and safety Seth Parker.

Another solid program with a great tradition is Central, which has won 30 Iowa Conference titles, made 20 NCAA playoff appearances since 1973 and has not had a losing season in 50 years. The Dutch, with 15 starters returning, will be a force again. Quarterback Nate Snead passed for 1,264 yards and rushed for 872 more last year while also scoring 32 touchdowns. Jeremy Snead was the team's leading receiver (46 catches for 541 yards). There's plenty of experience on a defense led by linebacker Greg Best and end Shane Wong.

Ben Wartman knows something about delivering a winning season, and he returns after leading St. Thomas to its first 11-win campaign and the playoffs for the first time since 1990. He rushed for 1,827 yards and scored 24 times last year. Center Josh Ostrue is one of the best at the position. The Tommies also have a weapon in receiver/return man Fritz Waldvogel (2,321 all-purpose yards), who returned six kickoffs for touchdowns last year.

If there is a slip-up at Mount Union this year, Ohio Northern could give the Ohio Athletic Conference a new champion for the first time in 19 seasons. The Polar Bears have been flirting with joining the elite group since Dean Paul took over as coach seven years ago. They have several big-play performers on offense, including quarterback Kyle Simmons (2,224 total yards, 26 TDs), running back Brent Donley (1,104 yards, 16 TDs), and return man J.J. Mihoci (553 return yards). Six starters are back on defense, but help is needed at linebacker.

Thomas More will have one of the nation's best defenses, with eight starters back from an 11-1 campaign. Safety Zach Autenrieb had 50 tackles and nine interceptions last year, and tackle Tyler Owens and linebacker Nick Gramke are also solid defenders. Six starters return on offense.

Washington & Jefferson has posted 26 straight winning seasons and appeared in 21 of the past 25 Division III playoffs. The Presidents are loaded again with 13 returning starters. Safety Craig Sedunov, a transfer from Pittsburgh, had 77 tackles and five interceptions last year. Settling on a quarterback will be the key after Gino Rometo and Steven Shumaker split time a year ago.

North Central has dominated the College Conference of Illinois and Wisconsin in recent years, and that is expected to continue in 2010. Six defensive starters from last year are back along with two other starters from 2008—linebacker Matt Wenger (137 tackles) and cornerback Derek Sulo—who both received medical hardships. Joe Schneiderbauer and Josh McLeod are the top defenders, while offensive guard Kyle Antos is a leader up front. But the play of running back Nick Kukuc as well as the winner of the quarterback race between Spencer Stanek and Brad Crackel will be crucial to the team's success.

Johns Hopkins tied a school record with 10 wins last year and could do it again this season. The Blue Jays' defensive unit, led by safety Mike Milano (84 tackles), is exceptional, having forced two or more turnovers in each of its 13 games in '09. Sam Eagleson delivers big plays in the secondary and will be a force again this year. Wide receiver Dan Crowley (69 catches) should be a favorite target for quarterback Hewitt Tomlin. Kicker Alex Lachman is also a weapon.

Quarterback Alex Tanney could take Monmouth (Ill.) deep into the playoffs this year, as he has passed for more than 10,000 career yards already and led an offense that was second in the nation last year in total yards per game (527.9). His top targets will be Michael Blodgett, Matt Shepherd and Kramer Matzen.

Injuries destroyed Hardin-Simmons last year, taking out five of its top players, but the experience gained could be beneficial this season, as 10 offensive and nine defensive starters join their now-healthy teammates. The Cowboys are known for their offensive firepower, but the defense led the way in '09, yielding just 23.7 points per game. Expect the offense to be potent, with quarterback Justin Feaster and slot receiver ZaVious Robbins back from injuries. Feaster threw for 3,023 yards and 31 touchdowns in '08.

Coe has plenty of star talent, including defensive end Frank Weymiller and quarterback Brad Boyle, the Iowa Conference MVP. Boyle broke an NCAA record for most consecutive passes thrown (305) without an interception. He's one of nine starters back on an offense that includes five returning linemen. The Kohawks must replace three linebackers, but the defensive front is experienced and reliable.

The strongest specialty teams in the country belong to Trinity (Texas), as it boasts All-Americans at punter (Kyle Trella), kicker (Garrett Biel) and return specialist (Caleb Urban). Though depth is not an issue, with 15 starters returning, there is a question at quarterback. Trinity will need to choose a QB from three players who all started at times last year.

Trine will be loaded with eight starters returning on offense and defense from a 10-win team. Also, with 28 seniors on the roster, the Thunder have a wealth of experience. The play of dependable quarterback Eric Watt (2,161 passing yards, 518 rushing) will be noticeable, as he throws the ball to Kent Biller, whose running ability complements the passing game. Aaron Shoemaker, Jake Vance and Aaron Selking are the top defenders.

For Wisconsin-Stout, running back Craig Warminski could catapult his team into the spotlight. He rushed for more than 1,000 yards last year, powering a running game that produced 220.7 yards a game. Tyler Butzler is the leader up front and tight end Pat Mengelkoch makes plays on a consistent basis. The Blue Devils will be solid defensively if the secondary can rebuild around Adam Churchill.

Defense is no longer being overlooked at Hampden-Sydney, which is trying to repeat a 10-win campaign. Will Rigenbach was the conference's best defensive lineman last year after recording 14.5 sacks, and Bill Doody led the nation with nine interceptions. If either Travis Lane or Scott Cheney delivers at quarterback, the Tigers will be contenders.

Several positions on offense, including quarterback and four spots on the line, must be replaced, but Wabash will still be in contention for a conference title and NCAA playoff berth. Two big-play threats on offense are wideouts Kody LeMond and Wes Chamblee. Tailback Derrick Yoder leads the running attack. On defense, tackles JD McClintic and Jake Kolisek top a solid unit.

Case Western Reserve has won 31 straight regular-season games and should be playoff-bound again. The Spartans lose six starters on offense, but receiver Zach Homyk can carry a big load. Still, repeating last year's offensive output will be a challenge. The key defender will be lineman Dale English, who led his team with 15 tackles for loss last season.

The first win this year will be the 565th at Franklin & Marshall and could come early on, as plenty of talent and experience return on offense. Tight end Michael Deutch (35 catches, 9 TDs), quarterback John Harrison

(3,096 passing yards, 32 TDs) and receiver Jay Ridinger are worth watching. Linebacker Sam Massaro will lead a defense that has seven starters back.

OTHERS TO WATCH

Wheaton (Ill.) will likely be carried by its defense, which has eight starters with a year of experience in the new 3-4 scheme. Center Nick Biggee is one of five starters back on offense. ... Mississippi College advanced to the second round of the playoffs last year and has 16 starters returning, including running back Steven Knight (1,333 rushing yards). ... Look for Rowan to rebound after missing the playoffs with a 7-3 record. Seven starters on both sides of the ball return. Defensive end Matt Hoffman and linebacker Jerome Gordon must be leaders until the offense can settle in behind a new quarterback. ... DePauw made its first postseason appearance last year and has 18 starters back, including 10 on defense, to lead the way. The new quarterback will have to get the ball to standout receiver Alex Koors (73 catches for 1,266 yards). ... The Redlands will have two new coordinators but plenty of experience with 17 starters led by defensive playmaker Mike Nicolini. Also look for a strong kicking game. The return of quarterback Dan Selway and receiver Evan Reuter from injuries is big, but there's no guarantee Selway will be the starting quarterback. ...

Graduation left big holes to be filled at Albright, but the good news is the Lions played a lot of underclassmen last year. Alvin Thomas is a standout on defense. ... Occidental lost several close games in '09 but plans to reverse the trend. Five of the returnees were all-conference performers, with the top player being defensive lineman Alex Wertheimer. ... Susquehanna will play in the Centennial Conference for the first time in 2010, but players such as quarterback Rich Palazzi, cornerback Braden Klingler and linebacker Mitch Phillips should make the Crusaders contenders. ... Quarterback Tim Bailey (2,546 yards, 21 TDs) will boost St. John Fisher, and running back Christian Zemaitis is also a key to an offense that averaged 413.8 yards per game a year ago. ... Augustana is trying to make it back to the playoffs and has something to build on with 11 starters returning. Quarterback David Lee and receiver Zachary McCullough can provide answers. ...

Don't be surprised if Ripon challenges for postseason play with an outstanding defense that has six starters returning with experience, including linebacker Mike Krause. The news is even better on offense with nine starters back, including quarterback Matthew Miller and fullback T.J. Pierce. ... Dickinson will be good defensively, but several important offensive holes must be dealt with in a hurry. ... Pacific Lutheran has several skilled players back, including receiver Greg Ford and quarterback Jordan Rasmussen. ... Wisconsin-LaCrosse has a chance to rebound with 12 starters returning. Quarterback Nick Anker is being counted on to lead the team. He must get the ball to receivers Alex Maxinoski and Travis Bordeau.

No limit to points Sioux Falls will put up in NAIA swan song

By WILL LONG, Editorial Intern

Last season's NAIA championship game had a familiar ending. Sioux Falls claimed a second straight national title with a 25-22 victory over Lindenwood. The win gave the Cougars their third championship in four years.

Opposing coaches may be able to breathe easier in 2011, when Sioux Falls makes the jump up to NCAA Division II. Until then, the South Dakota powerhouse remains eligible for the NAIA championship.

This year, Sioux Falls is again the favorite, but Lindenwood and Carroll have their sights set on dethroning the Cougars.

Sioux Falls got about as close to perfection as possible in 2009 with the NAIA's top defense and an offense that averaged 51.7 points a game.

For the Cougars to defend their title, they must replace NAIA Player of the Year Lorenzo Brown at quarterback and coach Kalen DeBoer, who left to become offensive coordinator at Southern Illinois.

New coach Jed Stugart, who arrives after a stint as linebackers coach at UNLV, will rely on running back Kristian Porter and wide receiver Jon Ryan to spearhead the offense. Linebacker Dominic Studzinski (8.5 sacks) and end Brandon Koolstra (6.5) will lead the defense.

Coming off its first title game appearance, Lindenwood (Mo.) has its sights set on a return trip to the big dance in Rome, Ga. Led by quarterback Philip Staback and running back Denodus O'Bryant, the Lions may have the best offensive backfield in the country. Linebacker Parks Peterson, the team's top returning tackler, will lead the defense.

Carroll (Mont.) captured its 10th straight Frontier Conference championship in 2009. This year, the Saints will rely on preseason All-America linebacker Thomas Dolan and safety Brian Strobel. Quarterback Gary Wagner also returns after throwing 27 touchdowns last season.

Last year was a season of firsts for Saint Xavier (Ill.). The Cougars wrapped up their first perfect regular season and the Mid-States Football Association championship. Quarterback Anthony Kropp (4,425 passing yards, 43 TDs) and running back Donnie Selby (777 rushing yards, 13 TDs) return on offense, but the defense must replace linebacker Mike Lally, who registered 25 tackles for loss in 2009.

Coach Steve Ryan and the Morningside (Iowa) Mustangs will rely on a defense that returns eight starters, led by linebacker Marshall Tuttle. However, the offense must replace All-America running back Jake Peterson and wideout Beau Kildow.

MidAmerica Nazarene (Kan.) returns the starting backfield of an offense that averaged 41.9 points per game last year. All-America linebacker Jake Duren (96 tackles) leads the Pioneers' defense.

Cumberlands (Ky.) returns 10 offensive and seven defensive starters from a 9-2 team. Quarterback Jay Bright brings a dual-threat option, while linemen Corey Maddox and Anthony Woods anchor the defense.

Missouri Valley returns its top five tacklers from a defense that allowed only 16 points and a nation-leading 48.9 rushing yards per game last season. The combination of quarterback Chris White and receiver Darrell Madry will spark the Vikings' offense.

Returning linebacker Brandon Nigro, the team's top tackler in 2009, will give McKendree (Ill.) solid leadership on a defense that allowed just 15.1 points per game. The Bearcats must replace running back Joe Beimfohr.

Saint Francis (Ind.) loses tailback Daniel Carter from the nation's fifth-best rushing attack. Coach Kevin Donley must also replace the graduated Stephen Whited (8 sacks).

JUNIOR REPORT COLLEGE

Maturation point

Primed and ready, junior college players are becoming gems at FBS programs and in the NFL.

By Tony Jimenez
Topeka (Kan.) Capital-Journal

Former Coffeyville (Kan.) CC coach Skip Foster remembers Ryan Lilja well. Coming out of Shawnee Mission (Kan.) Northwest High 10 years ago, Foster was "as sure as Sears" that the undersized offensive lineman would be an outstanding player in time.

Foster and Jeff Leiker, who coached Lilja in 2000 and 2001, respectively, in the Kansas Jayhawk Conference, saw unending upside to Lilja's game. He had excellent feet, good body control, strength and solid instincts.

Lilja, now with the Kansas City Chiefs, is not the only former junior college athlete to make it to the NFL. In Super Bowl 44, there were 10 former two-year-school players on either the Indianapolis or New Orleans roster. And each of these players honed his skills in obscure small towns scattered around the U.S. amid little fanfare and even less publicity.

"Whether it's to improve your physical or academic skills, junior colleges are vital to the overall college landscape," Foster says. "I know Ryan's proud of his accomplishments and the way he made it to the NFL. He greatly developed his technique and got better by playing against high-caliber athletes in the Jayhawk Conference. I know he's glad he went to Coffeyville before going to Kansas State (known for tapping the junior college circuit) and then the pros. He was a good player when he got here, but he left juco a much better player."

While New Orleans tight end Jeremy Shockey (NE Oklahoma A&M/Miami, Fla.) and Colts cornerback Kelvin Hayden (Joliet JC/Illinois) played at four-year schools after their junior college years, Saints defensive end Paul Spicer (DuPage) went to NCAA Division II Saginaw Valley State in Michigan. But all paid their dues to get to the Super Bowl.

"In his freshman year, Paul had very average strength, but his motor skills were above average and he had a very strong work ethic," says Bob MacDougall, who coached Spicer at DuPage (1994-95) and Hayden at Joliet (2001-02) during his many seasons in the Illinois juco ranks. "Paul was always in the weight room and a leader in the offseason program, and the other players followed his lead. I'm not surprised he's in the NFL. The Super Bowl experience is something you can't forget. Paul has often said if it were not for DuPage he would not be where he is today.

"Kelvin (Hayden) was a captain at Illinois, which says a lot. To stay on top of your game today, it takes 12 months a year of work, and Kelvin knew that. When our offseason began he was usually the first one to arrive and the last to leave. He was never satisfied being average."

Whatever the case, Leiker, now the athletic director at Coffeyville, says a Super Bowl player's background doesn't matter; they all feel fortunate to be there. Junior college players just started in a different place than many NFL athletes, he says.

"Junior college athletics allow student-athletes a chance to grow and mature while getting a chance to play their sport," Leiker says. "Every junior college across the country has success stories like Ryan's. The opportunities at jucos across the country are underappreciated."

1 FORT SCOTT (KAN.) CC (II-I in 2009)

Since coach Jeff Sims arrived in 2007, the Greyhounds have gone from 7-23 in the three seasons before Sims to 29-6 during the coach's three-year tenure. The team peaked last year when it finished just short of an undefeated season, falling in the NJCAA championship game to Blinn College in Texas, 31-26. The two teams will battle again in Blinn's 2010 home opener Aug. 28. Sophomore defensive end Frank Bryant and sophomore offensive lineman Jeff Johnson will highlight the Fort Scott front lines. The defense is likely to be more ahead of the offense early in the campaign, but things should balance out for Sims in time for the postseason.

2 BUTTE CC (CALIF.) (8-3)

Butte will be in the hunt for a national championship with its 50 returnees and a handful of talented redshirt freshmen led by defensive backs Kedron Paul and Kris Waters. All-America offensive tackle Brady Lisoski and center Darin Gooch, along with defensive lineman Steven Hoffart and return specialist/wide receiver Rashad Ross (4 returns for TDs), are the keys to title contention. And though 11 starters return, quarterback is a question mark. Having produced standouts such as Aaron Rodgers (Green Bay Packers), Brett Ratliff (Cleveland Browns) and Jordan Rodgers (Vanderbilt) in the past, coach Jeff Jordan should have no trouble finding a star under center.

3 BLINN COLLEGE (TEXAS) (II-I)

Thanks to good recruiting and intense play in the rugged Southwest Conference, the defending NJCAA champion is always in the national title hunt. With a handful of starters returning on offense and six on defense, Blinn won't roll over anytime soon. The Buccaneers center their hopes on a trio of players: wide receiver Darrin Moore, linebacker

JEFF JOHNSON
FORT SCOTT (KAN.) CC

Dextrell Simmons and quarterback Justin Tuggle, a transfer from Boston College. Others to watch include linebacker Princeton Jackson, defensive tackle Jeremy Williams, defensive back Kip Dailey, wide receiver Sean Rutherford and center Sean Robertson. The linebacker situation will be strong and deep, but the offensive line could be suspect with only two returning starters.

4 COLLEGE OF SAN MATEO (CALIF.) (II-2)

San Mateo has a nice opening line when it comes to recruiting: Its alumni include John Madden, Dick Vermeil and Bill Walsh, who have a combined five Super Bowl rings as coaches. The Bulldogs' play on the field is big-time, too. A year ago, San Mateo lost in the California juko title game to Mount San Antonio 7-6. Led by wideout Rahsaan Vaughn and lineman Jeremy Galten, nine starters return to an offense that averaged 473 yards per game last year. The defense, paced by cornerback Dwaine Simpson, will more than hold its own in the NorCal Conference.

5 BUTLER (KAN.) CC (8-3)

There was an unspoken queasiness in El Dorado during the offseason after the Grizzlies missed their first bowl game in 11 years. Coach Troy Morrell has amassed a 104-14 record with two perfect seasons (2003, '07) in his 10-year tenure. In 2009, however, his Grizzlies lost all three of their games (all on the road) by a combined 12 points to the two teams in the NJCAA title game (Blinn and twice to Fort Scott). The three setbacks were the most Butler had posted in the last three seasons combined. The Grizzlies will respond in 2010 behind Cornelius Carradine, a vicious-hitting defensive end, and wide receiver Marcus Kennard, who averaged 19.3 yards per catch as a freshman. Look for a big bounce back.

6 NAVARRO COLLEGE (TEXAS) (II-I)

What are they feeding the players in Corsicana? The basketball team placed fourth in last March's NJCAA tournament and the football squad was No. 3 in last year's final NJCAA poll. Those teams are consistently among the best in the junior college ranks. The football Bulldogs have a 29-5 record over the last three seasons and defeated Mississippi Gulf Coast CC 37-26 in the C.H.A.M.P.S. Heart of Texas Bowl in 2009. Despite losing six defensive linemen who contributed heavily, Navarro is again formidable. The Bulldogs' dozen returning starters include defensive end Toby Jackson and offensive guard Daniel Campbell.

7 MISSISSIPPI GULF COAST CC (9-3)

Former nose tackles Terrence Cody (Alabama), Sean Merrill (Southern Miss) and James Carmon (Mississippi

SEAN RUTHERFORD
BLINN COLLEGE (TEXAS)

State) have all put an exclamation point behind Gulf Coast's name by demonstrating their abilities at the FBS level. Now comes John Jenkins, who looks to be cut from the same cloth. He is one of a handful of returning defensive starters. But the Bulldogs' strongest point should be on the offensive line, where returning tackles Andy Nations and Jeremy Graffree and tight end Kennedy Helms head up one of the strongest unit in the country. Big things are expected from Ole Miss transfer Clayton Moore at quarterback, but coach Steve Campbell usually does well with whatever he's given. So expect to see Gulf Coast in another bowl game, as it has been in four of the last five seasons.

8 SNOW COLLEGE (UTAH) (10-2)

After finishing among the top five in the NJCAA in the last four seasons, the beat just keeps on going in Ephriam. With a nice recruiting class, 10 returning starters (4 on offense, 6 on defense) and up to 20 players returning from Mormon missions—including center Mark Pratt, defensive back Braden Frampton and defensive end Nate Pope—talent abounds. The defensive line will be strong again, thanks to end Tenny Palepoi. Defensive back Preston Hadley will help out on defense as well, along with punter Chad Isom (40.2-yard average as a freshman). Snow always seems to produce quality tight ends—the Green Bay Packers' Devin Frischknecht is an alumnus—and much is expected from new sensation Drew Robinson. Coach Steve Coburn's record at Snow (43-5) rates among the best in the juco ranks over the last four seasons.

9 CITY COLLEGE OF SAN FRANCISCO (10-1)

As a defensive back at CCSF in 1966, coach George Rush was a decent player, and he has passed the test of time as a good coach with the winningest record in school history (274-85 in 33 seasons). In 2010, expect Rush to lead the Rams to one of their best campaigns. Led by David Garness, the offensive line returns three starters. Defensively, expect big seasons from linebacker Sua Tuala, defensive tackle Je'Marcus Williams and defensive backs Nigel Malone and DeShon Marman.

10 CERRITOS (CALIF.) COLLEGE (8-2)

Frank Mazzotta may never surpass former Cerritos players Joe Gibbs and Jim Zorn in coaching fame, but he's taken almost half of his teams to bowl games during more than 32 years as head coach. Expect that success to continue. Aside from the 12 starters back on offense and defense, there are 65 players on the roster and 25 redshirt freshmen now hungry for playing time. Leading the charge will be offensive tackle Fou Fonoti, who started all 11 games in 2009 and seems destined for the NFL, and safety Keith McGill, who returned two interceptions for 100-yard touchdowns as a freshman. This group should be good on both lines. The biggest question mark looms at quarterback.

THE CLASS OF 2011

(L TO R): LOUIS LOPEZ / CAL SPORT MEDIA; COURTESY RIVALS

Highly efficient QB LeMay leads bumper crop of prospects

By Brian McLaughlin, Sporting News

Flash forward to the 2014 college football season. If it was possible for one college football program to somehow horde the entire Sporting News preseason high school All-America Team, that squad would probably be in national title contention around the time that campaign rolls around.

Or at least we'd like to think so. Below is the cream of the high school crop for the class of 2011—the athletes we'll be watching win championships and awards while also pursuing the dream of playing in the NFL. Check back in a couple years and see how we did.

QUARTERBACKS

This year's crop of quarterbacks seems to be deeper than last year's group. Heading up the list is Matthews (N.C.) native Christian LeMay, a proven leader whose play has helped his Butler High program challenge national powerhouse Independence (Charlotte, N.C.) for area supremacy. LeMay threw for 3,296 yards and an eye-popping 44 touchdowns last year, with only two interceptions. He considered Florida, Alabama, Notre Dame, Clemson and Texas A&M before committing to Georgia on April 30. Teddy Bridgewater (Miami), Braxton Miller (Huber Heights, Ohio), J.W. Walsh (Denton, Texas) and Max Wittek (Santa Ana, Calif.) are a few of the other top signal-callers in the class.

RUNNING BACKS

If a college football program wanted to hog some of the nation's top running backs, there's a top duo to corral. At one spot is lightning-quick De'Anthony Thomas of Los Angeles. He averaged 11.1 yards per carry last fall, scoring 15 touchdowns.

Thomas is also a talented return man and defensive back. Over in Abilene (Texas) is Thomas' mythical backfield mate, Herschel Sims. He rushed for 2,260 yards and scored 32 touchdowns last year in one of the toughest football-playing states in the nation. Thomas seems destined to play in the Pac-10—possibly at USC or Cal—though the rest of the country is chasing him.

Sims has Oklahoma, USC and a slew of other schools interested.

WIDE RECEIVERS/TIGHT ENDS

Last fall Kasen Williams (Sammamish, Wash.) was the No. 1 receiver for Jake Heaps, the quarterback on Sporting News' Class of 2010 All-America Team. Williams caught 74 passes for 1,209 yards and 20 touchdowns. He is the son of former Washington player Aaron Williams and swears that he's wide open on his college choice. Vernon Hills (Ill.) passing target Davaris Daniels also has a strong football pedigree, being the son of veteran Washington Redskins defensive end Phillip Daniels. The younger Daniels caught 13 touchdowns last year, and Notre Dame is one of many schools he's considering. Tight end Ray Hamilton (Strongsville, Ohio) is being chased by Notre Dame, Oklahoma and Michigan, among others.

OFFENSIVE LINEMEN

La'El Collins didn't need much time to decide he wanted to play for hometown LSU, committing early last fall. The Baton Rouge, La., native has great feet, a powerful presence and is an outstanding pass protector. Joining Collins on the line are Brey Cook (Springdale, Ark.), Garrett Greenlea (Klein, Texas), Conor Hanratty (New Canaan, Conn.) and Cyrus Kouandjio (Hyattsville, Md.). Greenlea is already committed to Texas, while Cook has schools such as Arkansas and Oklahoma pursuing him. Hanratty is the son of former Notre Dame and Pittsburgh Steeler quarterback Terry Hanratty. Kouandjio could go anywhere, though Penn State and Pitt would love to see him stay closer to home.

DEFENSIVE LINEMEN

The end position is loaded this year, and leading the way are Ray Drew (Thomasville, Ga.) and Jadeveon Clowney (Rock Hill, S.C.). Drew, who grew up a Florida State fan, is being heavily pursued by nearly all of the SEC and ACC schools. Clowney is right up the road in South Carolina and could be swayed by coach Steve Spurrier and the Gamecocks before all is said and done. Clowney's 23 sacks and 29 quarterback pressures last fall have attracted attention. Defensive tackles Timmy Jernigan (Lake City, Fla.) and Kevin McReynolds (Washington, D.C.) also have dozens of options. Jernigan would be tough to steal away from the in-state powers at Florida, while McReynolds has everybody from USC to Ohio State trying to get his commitment.

LINEBACKERS

All four of this year's linebackers have the potential to be tackling machines at an elite BCS school within a few years. Alabama commitment Brent Calloway (Russellville, Ala.) rushed for more than 1,000 yards as a sophomore last year, showing his versatility. But he'll likely play outside linebacker in college. Michigan State commitment Lawrence Thomas (Detroit) could have played for anyone in the country but decided to stay close to home. Stephone Anthony (Wadesboro, N.C.) has intercepted 11 passes over the past two seasons, showing his playmaking ability. North

Kasen Williams

Carolina and N.C. State would hate to see him leave the state. Curtis Grant (Richmond, Va.) could pick schools such as Alabama, Florida, USC or LSU, or he may choose to stay closer to home.

DEFENSIVE BACKS

Wayne Lyons (Fort Lauderdale, Fla.) is having a hard time keeping up with the more than 40 scholarship offers he's received. The safety, who had 21 tackles for loss as a junior, could stay in the state with schools such as Florida or Florida State, but others from every other corner of the country have made offers. Speedy cornerback Doran Grant (Akron, Ohio) would make several Big Ten schools happy if he picked them, especially Ohio State. Safety Sheroid Evans (Sugar Land, Texas) is versatile enough to play cornerback or safety for Texas, where he has committed.

ATHLETES

James Wilder Jr. and Devon Blackmon have one thing in common: They could dominate college football at multiple positions. Wilder (Tampa, Fla.) will likely play linebacker in college, a position at which he racked up 19 sacks last fall. But his hard-nosed running style also produced 1,004 yards and 15 touchdowns on the ground. Blackmon (Fontana, Calif.) is the more elusive of the duo, having played some at quarterback and as a return man in high school, but he'll likely play wide receiver in college. Blackmon likes the Pac-10 and is being courted by all of the conference's powers. Wilder, the son of former NFL Pro Bowler James Wilder, is interested in the big-time Florida schools.

KICKERS/PUNTERS

Kickers and punters often don't get recruited until later in the process, but two gems have already risen through the ranks. Punter Kris Albarado (Lake Charles, La.) has been listed as the top punter in the country by many experts and has several SEC schools, as well as Texas A&M, checking in. Kicker Connor Loftus (Orange, Calif.) hit nine field goals last year and is a great kickoff man. He already holds an offer from N.C. State and has dozens of other schools looking at him.

PREP TEAMS TO WATCH

Florida home to three of our 10 terrific programs for 2010

By Brian McLaughlin
Sporting News

(listed alphabetically by state)

Shiloh Christian

• (Springdale, Ark.) 13-1 in 2009 •

Quarterback Kiehl Frazier is the biggest reason the Saints are listed among the top 10 teams to watch. The quick-footed signal-caller has size (6-3, 215 pounds) and speed (4.57 seconds in the 40-yard dash). He threw for 3,817 yards and 48 touchdowns last fall, while also rushing for 764 yards and 14 touchdowns. He'll choose from just about any national powerhouse he wants to play for. The Saints also have some quality talent on the lines of scrimmage with offensive lineman Travis Bodenstein (who has five offers) and defensive tackle Samuel Harvill (who was leaning to Kansas State at press time) highlighting the group. This is a team that could do some damage outside of Arkansas.

Junipero Serra

• (Gardena, Calif.) 15-0 •

The Cavaliers shouldn't have too many problems scoring this season, as quarterback Conner Preston is back under center and has his top target returning in wide receiver George Farmer. Preston threw for 3,437 yards and 44 touchdowns last fall and has attracted offers from three non-BCS schools. Farmer (41 receptions, 891 yards, 12 touchdowns), on the other hand, has every school in the country after him. On defense, secondary man Marqise Lee (who has offers from Florida, LSU, Michigan and Washington) and end Jason Gibson (Florida, LSU, Oregon, UCLA) are the standouts.

Dwyer

• (Palm Beach Gardens, Fla.) 14-1 •

The Panthers lost a few key players to graduation from a state title team, but they're still loaded. Quarterback Jacoby Brissett, who passed for 1,463 yards and 19 touchdowns and only five interceptions in 2009, has attracted offers from Florida State, Rutgers, West Virginia and Wisconsin. Tight end Nick O'Leary (who has offers from Florida, Florida State, Georgia, Miami and Tennessee) is one player Brissett can count on offensively. The defense, which gave up just 79 points in 15 games last year, also looks strong, with end Curtis Maggitt (Alabama, Florida and LSU have offered) leading the way.

Northwestern

• (Miami) 10-2 •

Alabama, Florida, Miami and Tennessee make up a fraction of the schools that would love to get their hands on Bulls quarterback Teddy Bridgewater—but he's slippery. Last year he threw for 2,546 yards and 32 touchdowns while also rushing for more than 400 yards and eight scores. He's the biggest reason Northwestern

Kiehl Frazier

once again looks like the team to beat in a treacherous Miami-Dade region (now that Miami Central graduated a ton of its talent). Wide receiver Eli Rogers, who has offers from Louisville and Miami, is just one of many weapons Bridgewater will have at his disposal.

St. Thomas Aquinas

• (Fort Lauderdale, Fla.) 13-1 •

The Raiders graduated several BCS-level college signees, but there's still a nice mix of talent on the roster. Last year's starting quarterback, Jake Rudock, is back in the fold after throwing for 1,989 yards and 34 touchdowns and running for three more. He has Memphis and Wisconsin knocking on his door. Protecting Rudock is probably the top recruit on the roster, offensive lineman Bobby Hart, who can pretty much write his ticket to any major program in the nation. Rudock will have two future BCS-level prospects to throw to in wideouts Phillip Dorsett and Rashad Greene. Offense will be the strength of this team.

TOP 10 PREP TEAMS TO WATCH

Don Bosco Prep

• (Ramsey, N.J.) 12-0 •

The Ironmen could be rebuilding after being named mythical national champions by several polls last fall. This is a program that always impresses, however, and deserves to be mentioned. Leading the way this fall will be returning starting quarterback Gary Nova, who threw for 1,668 yards and 23 touchdowns and led his team to impressive wins over De La Salle (Concord, Calif.) and Prattville (Ala.) to open last season. Nova reports scholarship offers from Boston College, Pittsburgh, Rutgers, Vanderbilt and Virginia. He'll undoubtedly be the key if the Ironmen continue to dominate this fall.

Butler

• (Matthews, N.C.) 15-0 •

The Bulldogs won the state title at the highest level of prep football in North Carolina and have overtaken neighboring rival Independence (Charlotte, N.C.) as the dominant team in the region. Butler is loaded with an arsenal of returning weapons, led by the top quarterback on Sporting News' All-America Team, Christian LeMay (3,296 passing yards, 44 TDs, 2 INTs). LeMay will have plenty to work with in running backs Deion Walker and Jahwan Edwards, plus a corps of wideouts led by his younger brother, Uriah LeMay. Safety Mark Bridges and end Colin Parson are the leaders on defense, but linebacker Kris Frost is probably the second-best college prospect on this team after its All-America quarterback.

Glenville

• (Cleveland) 13-2 •

The Tarblooders are stocked with elite talent for this season. Offensive lineman Aundrey Walker is a big-time prospect who appears to be down to Michigan State, Ohio State and USC. Lightning-quick athlete Shane Wynn also has the option of picking between the in-state Buckeyes and USC, along with several other schools. Quarterback Cardale Jones is 6-5 and has several college options himself. Defensively, linebacker Andre Sturdivant and tackle Antwan Crutcher will be playing on Saturdays, too. Glenville's city rival, St. Ignatius, still presents a significant obstacle to overcome for championships.

Ronnell Sims
Abilene

Abilene

• (Texas) 15-0 •

The Eagles won't have any problem generating offensive firepower this year. The main cog in the offense is running back Herschel Sims, who rushed for 2,337 yards and 31 touchdowns last year and has schools such as Oklahoma and USC drooling over him. But Sims isn't the only one who can move the ball. Quarterback Ronnell Sims, who has attracted in-state scholarship offers from Baylor and Rice, is back after passing for 1,752 yards and 17 touchdowns in 2009 while rushing for 1,185 yards and 14 more scores. This is a hungry team that already has the experience of winning a state championship.

Trinity

• (Euless, Texas) 14-2 •

The Trojans aren't loaded with blue-chip recruits, but they'll have their share of college signees come February. The top college prospects are Baylor commitments Nila Kneubuhl (tight end) and Suleiman Masumbuko (defensive tackle), but this is a group that plays well together. The running game should be a strong again, with running back Tevin Williams (who has an offer from Utah) being one of the key components. Look for Trinity to be one of the best programs in Texas this fall.

A revelation and a destination from Wayne Allyn Root

Sometimes I'm on a roll, but always I'm On A Mission.

And that mission is to make you more money than you ever made before on football!

You've seen me on TV. Or profiled in business magazines - always surrounded by so much praise you probably think it's hype. Who IS this guy? Is he for real?

Now you're going to get your answer and you will like it. Because, yes, I am that Wayne Root. I have sought media attention. But I'm On A Mission: to pick more winners and make more money for my customers than anybody that ever lived!

And I'm succeeding. I have been at or near the top every year since I started. And I keep getting better! My job doesn't get easier. It gets tougher because I demand more and more of myself for my customers.

Example: Last year - for the 5th time in 6 years I set a NEW record for the most outright upset wins in a season - 82!

And those were my own records I broke (80 in '08 & '07, 66 in '06, 58 in '04) so I'm basically in a class by myself. But you knew that.

Now how would YOU like to play my nifty covers, my backdoor covers and my dogs-that-win- straight-up - and cash the safest, biggest bets of your life! I mean my Upset Club. It makes the most sense because it makes the most dollars. Look how we exploded off the snap in Weeks 1 & 2 last year:

(Yes I give out favorites when no good dogs are available)

10-3-1 WOW!

That was our total for the first two weeks. I couldn't maintain that win percentage - 76.9% for the whole season. But I do seem to rise to the occasion.

NOTE: Every pick I make is submitted (and time stamped via email) to The Sports Monitor for independent monitoring, documentation & verification.

Over that same span we won our September Upset Game of the Year ($12 Ohio State [+7] USC 15-18) and our NFL Game of the Month ($20 Bears [+3] Steelers 17-14).

You get an edge betting dogs. Popular favorites are almost always overpriced. Dogs have the edge in incentive. And think about this: once the favorite establishes a lead, they tend to play conservative, which makes back door covers more likely - another reason Upset Club is the way to go!

Now all my clubs made money last year - my Perfect Play, my Millionaires Club, and so on. But the one club that made the most profit compared to its cost was my Upset Club. Which makes it perfect for the value shopper ambitious to move up the ladder. Is that YOU?
